Judge Divides Custody Between Two Moms

Denver — A Colorado district court judge has ruled that Girl M will attend school in Albany, N.Y., where her biological mother, Kelly Naylor, lives, and also spend her summer vacations and half of her winter breaks with Leanne Bueker, her "psychological mother" who lives in Colorado.

Judge Christopher Munch, who seemed to be taking his lead as a modern King Solomon, ordered the 10-year-old Girl M to spend part of each year divided between the two women in an effort to resolve the two-year legal custody battle the women have been involved in since their 10-year relationship broke up.

Judge Munch said he made his decision based on the best interests of the child, saying that the law does not necessarily favor the biological parent. After talking with the young girl, Judge Munch said she "loves Colorado" but that the suburban, middle-class neighborhood where Naylor lives in Albany would provide Girl M with a better educational situation.

N.Y. Mayor Draws Praise, Protest at Speech

New York — New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani was the object of a raucous protest by gay rights activists as he was speaking at the national convention of Log Cabin Republicans, a national gay GOP organization.

Some 30 members of the group Fed Up Queers battled with police and security guards in the lobby of the Roosevelt Hotel in Manhattan while Giuliani was addressing the gay Republicans, charging that despite efforts by the Log Cabin group to portray Giuliani as a friend "he has not been a friend to gays and lesbians in New York City."

At least four of the activists were arrested on charges of trespassing and disorderly conduct when a melee broke out after Giuliani left. Hotel security guards dragged one protester down a flight of stairs and gave one woman a bloody nose requiring medical treatment. Giuliani, who is widely expected to make a U.S. Senate bid next year, drew high praise from most of the Log Cabin Republicans.

New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani

"Our unique goal is to extend human freedom and responsibility to more and more people," Giuliani said during his 20-minute speech. "Your presence in the Republican Party is important in a philosophical way. You keep pushing us to the very highest and best mission this party can present for this country."

Historic Partners Registry Launched in Milwaukee

by William Attewell
of the IN Step staff

Milwaukee — At just after 8 a.m. on Sept. 1 the first of twenty gay and lesbian partners raised their right hands in Room 105 of City Hall and made Milwaukee history as they made their relationships public record on the first day of this city's domestic partner registry.

"I think the couples were elated," said Patrick Flaherty, co-chair of the Domestic Partnership Task Force, which lobbied for the registry. "I just feel really proud of the recognizes we're a committed couple," said Rosaldo.

The program was passed by the city's Common Council in July. Milwaukee becomes the second city in Wisconsin to have a same-sex registry, after Madison.

Partners who wish to register must each be at least 18, unmarried, unrelated to each other, of the same sex and live in Milwaukee. They also must show they are economically linked to each other. No one can be in more than one partnership. Registration, which costs $30, includes a certificate of the partnership.

Brown, who works as a manager for American Express Travel Management a business which does offer benefits to same-sex partners. Brown said that they had taken advantage of the benefits package for about year, but they had to jump through many hoops to qualify.

"If we had the registry certificate they [American Express] would have accepted it just like a marriage license," says Brown.

Mavis Tallman, a 62 year old retiree and Christine Brees have been together for over 30 years, they also signed up for the registry on the first day.

According to Tallman, there were many reasons to register, but most important was to acknowledge their relationship.

"It feels awfully good, it has been a long time coming though," Tallman told Noel Rosado (l) and Britt Brown, the first couple to sign up for Milwaukee's Same-Sex Domestic Partners Registry.

IN Step, "I am hoping it will lead to other things. I think we really need protections like married people have."

"I also registered to help the younger people," adds Tallman. "To make things better for everyone."

The first day of the registry ended with a reception in the City Hall Rotunda, which about 200 people attended.

Return of 'Ground Zero' War Again Erupting in Colorado Springs

by Keith Clark
of the IN Step staff

Colorado Springs, Colo. — There are increasing indicators that "Ground Zero" — the nickname given to Colorado Springs after the 1993 passage of the anti-gay Amendment 2 put gay rights in the cross-hairs of the far right — may once again be turning into a political war zone after a brief and rather uneasy cease-fire.

When the U.S. Supreme Court declared Amendment 2 unconstitutional, the verbal sparring between far-right activists and gay rights advocates in the city intensified dramatically and threatened to become a litmus test for every political campaign and public policy issue in the city.

Finally, in what many saw as a virtual referendum on the city's negative, anti-gay image, Will Perkins, the author of Amendment 2, ran for mayor against a candidate whose conciliatory campaign — and even her name — promoted moderation: Mary Lou Makepeace.

Makepeace defeated Perkins by a 3-to-2 margin in the race, but the level of antagonism had grown so intense that the Gill Foundation, a liberal charity organization set up by openly gay software tycoon Tim Gill, relocated its headquarters to Denver because it said it was having trouble recruiting good staffers due to the reputation of intolerance the city of Colorado Springs had earned.

This year's Aug. 29 Colorado Springs gay pride celebration, however, quickly turned into a political flash-point when Mayor Makepeace was asked for — and then issued — a gay pride proclamation.

The political tensions grew worse when a pro-gay group called the National Religious Leadership Roundtable, meeting in Colorado Springs the week before the gay pride celebration, issued a blistering statement criticizing Focus on the Family for "false and inflammatory rhetoric" about gays and lesbians. The letter charged that the anti-gay organization's "anti-homosexual campaign leads directly and indirectly to broken families, to divided churches, and to suffering and death to God's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered people."

Compounding the rather harsh language in the Religious Leadership Roundtable letter was the group's failure to even send Focus on the Family a copy of it. The Roundtable had to publicly apologize for not sending Focus on the Family a copy of the letter which it had sent out widely to news media nationally and in the state.

Leaders of the pro-gay roundtable said the organization would still like to meet with Focus leader James Dobson to discuss his group's anti-gay statements. But Focus a spokesperson said the roundtable's failure to bother sending Dobson a copy of the letter indicated it was a "media event designed for public consumption" and not a serious effort to increase communication between the two sides.

Then, just days before the actual gay pride parade was slated to hit the streets of downtown Colorado Springs, organizers of the event said they had hired extra police officers to patrol the parade route and warned people to keep their kids at home out of fears anti-gay demonstrations triggered by the growing tensions could be troublesome and create safety problems. The city's police department also announced that it was putting plainclothes officers in the parade crowd as an added security measure.

Gay rights activists then issued an 11th-hour alert urging gays and lesbians to turn up for the parade after callers to a local radio talk show began citing Bible passages as justification for killing homosexuals. One caller said, "If we're going to take Leviticus literally, we should stone and kill all the homosexuals." Activists said the language used on the call-in show "amounted to a death threat."

During this same radio show, far-right activists attacked Mayor Makepeace and launched an effort to recall her because of the gay rights proclamation, calling it a "slap in the face" to "Christians, Jews and any other traditional religious groups."

Despite this mounting tensions, the city's gay pride celebration went ahead without any incidents.

Police estimated some 4,000 people turned out for the event — significantly lower than the 8,000 figure organizers had initially predicted. Only about a dozen anti-gay demonstrators turned out, but police restricted them to one area of the parade route and nearly all the marchers ignored them.

While the parade may have escaped any serious problems other than a lower-than-expected turnout, rights activists in the state agree that the seething conflict between the city's powerful far-right groups and gay rights advocates may still boil over in yet another ballot-box battle between the two.

Although Amendment 2, the state voter initiative that banned laws protecting homosexuals, anti-gay activists in Colorado Springs have twice since tried to put an almost identical city measure on the ballot — and no one expects them to give up their efforts locally.

A possible recall effort aimed at Mayor Makepeace could also be another focus for anti-gay efforts to once again turn Colorado Springs back into a nuclear meltdown "Ground Zero" of the religious right.

Disturbing Resurgence of HIV

by Keith Clark
of the IN Step staff

Atlanta — Following the introduction and widespread use of potent new anti-HIV drugs, deaths from the disease in this country fell from 21,222 in 1997 to 17,047 in 1998 — a 20 percent decline. In the same period, newly reported cases also fell 11 percent.

It was all part of a continuing four-year trend of declining deaths and new infections, scientists attending the National HIV Prevention Conference in Atlanta were told. Dr. Helen Gayle, director of the Center for Disease Control's HIV prevention program, said that in "only two years, new combination therapies cut the annual level of death in half."

It was, for the researchers and medical workers attending the three-day conference, simply confirmation of earlier reports of the new medications' success. But government health officials also said there are indications the success in combating the epidemic is leveling off.

Dr. Gayle noted that AIDS-related deaths in the U.S. fell dramatically from nearly 50,000 in 1995 to 36,792 in 1996 — a 42 percent decrease — and then declined more slowly during the next two years. This, she said, suggests the main impact of the new protease inhibitors now commonly used to fight HIV

"HIV remains a serious disease that is still very much with us."

An equally frightening trend in the epidemic that's emerged clearly in the past few years is that while AIDS-related deaths have now fallen may have reached its maximum level. "For the time being it appears that much of the benefit of these new therapies has been realized," Dr. Gayle said.

"AFRICAN AMERICANS HAVE A 10 TIMES GREATER RISK OF DYING FROM AIDS..."

In itself that would be fairly discouraging news. But perhaps more worrisome is that the number of new HIV infections reported in the U.S. for 1998 was roughly 40,000 — the same level it has been for the past decade.

Dr. Gayle and others said burn-out and complacency about the epidemic make it "increasingly difficult to get people to pay attention to HIV prevention" efforts. "Despite a growing complacency about the need for HIV prevention," she said, to a fairly low level, the disease continues to kill African Americans in higher numbers than other racial groups.

While African Americans make up just 13 percent of the U.S. population, nearly half those who die from AIDS each year now are black.

"Overall, African Americans have a 10 times greater risk of dying from AIDS, of developing AIDS or of getting HIV infections than whites and about three times greater than Hispanics," Dr. Gayle said.

The disease is now the leading cause of death for younger and middle-aged African Americans, researcher noted. And data indicates that not only are blacks more likely than whites now to contract AIDS, but that once diagnosed with the disease, African Americans are also less likely to receive adequate treatment than whites, she added.

For that to change, said Dr. Gayle, all segments of the African American community will have to band together and fight for better AIDS education and treatment.

Black churches have increasingly started promoting AIDS/HIV awareness in this country, health experts say, but that development is fairly recent and still far from universal. "The stigma associated with homosexuality and IV drug use often make AIDS education in African American churches an extremely uncomfortable topic," Dr. Gayle said.

In addition, people who are infected but unaware they have contracted HIV generally have limited access to health care. And poverty, which is far more widespread among African Americans than among whites, further restricts health care access and often makes AIDS educational efforts more problematic as well.

"But in many ways, the story of how well we do in HIV and AIDS will be told by how well we do with the African-American population," she added.

Risky Sex Increasing Among Young Gay Men

by Keith Clark

Atlanta — While public health officials, AIDS educators and medical care workers attending the National HIV Prevention Conference in Atlanta were hearing bad news about a leveling off of AIDS-related deaths after several years of declining rates, there was even more disturbing news that unsafe sex appears to be sharply increasing among younger gay men in this country.

Researchers in seven U.S. cities — Baltimore, Dallas, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, San Francisco and Seattle — interviewed 3,492 young men between the ages of 15 and 22 and found that 7 percent were HIV-positive, with 3 percent who were becoming infected each year.

Despite intense AIDS educational efforts aimed at gay men for more than a decade, the scientists who surveyed them found that 41 percent of the young men reported having unprotected anal sex in the previous six months, said Linda Valleroy of the Centers for Disease Control, which backed the study.

The number of young gay men having unsafe sex also appears to be increasing, the researchers reported. Just four years earlier, a similar survey found that about 30 percent of younger gay men said they had had unprotected anal sex in the preceding six months.

Valleroy said another disturbing aspect of their findings was that most of the infected young men were unaware they were HIV-positive before the researchers tested them as part of the study.

The figures among African American young men in the survey were even more disturbing with 14 percent already infected and 5 percent becoming newly infected each year.

Danny Glover Ready to Lead AIDS Walk

Danny Glover

Milwaukee — Actor and social activist Danny Glover will lead this year's 10th anniversary AIDS Walk Wisconsin by serving as its Honorary Chair. Glover is slated to help recruit walkers throughout the summer and will attend the state's largest AIDS fundraiser on Sunday, September 12 in Milwaukee.

Glover is well known for his leading roles in many movies including Beloved, The Color Purple, Places in the Heart and the popular Lethal Weapon series.

Throughout his career he has been a strong advocate for human rights and helping youth. Glover also has a brother living with HIV.

"Since the beginning [of the AIDS epidemic], I have had friends who have succumbed to AIDS," Glover told IN Step in a recent interview. "I've been to the memorials and funerals. It resonates with me in regards to a sibling — but it [AIDS] also has had an impact on people I love and ... friends of mine."

"I come to the AIDS Walk for the serious purpose of intensifying the fight against AIDS in Wisconsin," Glover said. "I worry that a new generation of American youth are at high risk for HIV because of an unwarranted and dangerous complacency. I will challenge the people of Wisconsin to Walk with me and to work harder to defeat AIDS."

The need to support the AIDS Walk is more important than ever, says Doug Nelson, Executive Director of ARCW. According to Nelson, HIV infection rates continue to rise in Wisconsin and that the protease inhibitor drug therapy that was extending the lives of many, are now, regrettably, failing for up to one half of the people with HIV and AIDS taking the drug treatments.

Glover will speak at the AIDS Walk Breakfast and the Opening Ceremony, and will kick-off the expected 10,000 walkers during a red ribbon cutting with other Wisconsin dignitaries. He follows a distinguished list of Honorary Chairs including Bette Midler, Vice President Al Gore and Tipper Gore and Earvin 'Magic' Johnson.

To register for AIDS Walk Wisconsin, call 800-348-WALK, or register online at www.arcw.org. Bus transportation will be provided to the AIDS Walk from all parts of the state. Pledge walkers will gain free admission to the Indian Summer festival which is also being held on Summerfest grounds the day of AIDS Walk.

'Family Reunion' at Community Center a Success

Milwaukee — The Milwaukee LGBT Community Center recently announced that their Aug. 28 event "Our Family Reunion" was a fundraising and community success.

"Over 130 people attended raising $7,500 to support the Center's library, public education and youth programs," said Neil Albrecht, Executive Director. "We continue to be grateful to members of Milwaukee's LGBT community for their support of the Center, particularly in our first year of operations."

The event, which took place on Seeboth Street next to the Center, was set to resemble an urban garden party: white tent, tropical plants, strings of lighting, white linen tablecloths and a formal catered dinner.

"People really enjoyed the theme," said Dan Reidl, Center board member and event co-chair. "The extended family portraits, reunion t-shirts all really added to the overall flavor of the event. We definitely have an event that will become an annual event for the community."

Nabozny to Speak in Fox Valley

Kimberly, Wis. — Jamie Nabozny, a former Ashland, Wis. school district student who sued the school's administration for failure to protect him from years of sexual orientation harassment and abuse, will speak as a guest of Positive Voice on Sept. 20, at 7 p.m., at Liberty Hall in Kimberly. The meeting is free and open to the public.

Nabozny, now a student at a community college in Minnesota, settled with the school administration in Nov. 1996 for $900,000.00, plus up to an additional $62,000.00 for potential medical expenses related to injuries he suffered as a student.

Beginning in 1988 in middle school and continuing until he dropped out of high school in 1993, Nabozny suffered abuse and harassment that went beyond name-calling. He was spat upon, urinated upon, called a "fag" by a teacher, and beaten frequently. One attack left him in need of surgery. Another incident occurred when two boys wrestled Nabozny to the floor and performed a mock rape in front of a classroom of students. When Nabozny and his parents asked for help from school administrators, the school principal told them they should expect him to be harassed because he is gay.

After two suicide attempts, Nabozny dropped out of school. He later went on to complete his high school equivalency exam and is now enrolled in community college, where he hopes to obtain a Master's degree in Social Work.

"People have called me an activist," Mr. Nabozny declared in an Oasis magazine interview, "But I don't feel like I'm this radical person. I feel I'm doing what I'm doing because I think it's right.

Nabozny will speak as a guest of Positive Voice for their annual kick off meeting on Sept. 20 at Liberty Hall. Liberty Hall is located in Kimberly on 800 Eisenhower Drive. Directions from out of town are as follows: Highway 41 to 441 east, to College Avenue exit, then east to Eisenhower Drive. Kimberly is situated north of Appleton and south of Green Bay on Highway 41. Admission is free, donations accepted. Refreshments will be served. Reception at 6:30 p.m., speaker at 7:00 p.m. Attendance for this event is open to any interested parties.

The Fox Cities chapter of PFLAG (Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays) is also supporting this event.

Podell Honored For Gay Rights Work

Milwaukee — At the recent annual convention of the American Bar Association, Milwaukee attorney Richard Podell was accorded the prestigious Allies for Justice Award. This national award was presented to

Atty. Richard Podell

Podell and two other persons — the Honorable Bill Campbell, mayor of Atlanta, and New Orleans attorney Judy Perry Martinez — at an Aug. 6 reception held in their honor at the Hyatt Regency Atlanta.

The award recognizes "particularly noteworthy efforts by members of the bar, government officials and others in positions of leadership in society whose work has made important contributions to the struggle for rights for lesbians, gays, bisexuals and transgendered persons."

In Podell's case, the award honors his participation in the drafting of a resolution in favor of adoptions by same-gender couples and his spearheading of the successful effort to have the resolution adopted by the American Bar.

A second award, the Chair's Cup, was presented to Podell at the American Bar Family Law Section's Aug. 7 annual luncheon at Atlanta's Swissotel.

This award is the Family Law Section's highest honor, in recognition of "meritorious service exceeding what is expected of our leadership." Podell, president of the Richard J. Podell & Associates law firm, is past chair of the 16,000-member Family Law Section and serves as its liaison to the Canadian Bar Family Law Section.

Wisconsin Contestants Shine USofA Pageant

Cleveland, Ohio — Wisconsin contestants scored as three of the 12 finalists in the 1999-2000 Mr. Gay USofA pageant hereon Aug. 29. Jeff Jennings of Green Bay took sixth place, T. C. Hammond of Green Bay took ninth place and Dan E. Dance of Milwaukee took tenth place. John Michael Gordon of Texas won the title. Fellow Texan Gregory Bosarge was first runner-up.

In the preliminary competition both Jennings and Hammond won the talent competition in their respective groups. Jennings placed third in talent in the final with a live rendition of Neil Diamond's "Hello Again" paired with Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the USA."

In all six of the 49 contestants in the national competition were from Wisconsin. Also competing were Madison's Sean North and Michael K. and Green Bay's Tony K. According to Jennings, the Wisconsin contestants also had one of the largest and most vocal groups of supporters at the pageant. "There were more than fifty people from all over the state there to back us," Jennings said.

Veteran competitor Jennings also noted that this year's pageant was the largest in the history of the Mr. Gay USofA system. "Competition was fierce," Jennings told IN Step. "Last year there were only thirty-something contestants. One titleholder competed the first night then just dropped out because it was so intense this year."

Jennings, who also is the current Mr. Gay Wisconsin All American 2000, will compete in that pageant's national competition in Oklahoma City September 7-10.

FIND OUT WHY REBEKA SNEED'S PRE-PRIDEFEST POSTER CAMPAGIN RAISED SOME EYEBROWS AND THE BLOOD PRESSURE OF MANY IN MILWAUKEE'S THIRD WARD

*Exclusive Interview by William Attewell
of the IN Step staff*

With some wheat paste, a copy machine and the cover of darkness, lesbian activist and artist Rebeka Sneed, managed to create something of a firestorm in the week preceding this year's PrideFest.

Sneed, a relative newcomer to Milwaukee, decided to confront homophobia in our community in a big way with a series of humorous, in-your-face, pro-lesbian posters, with headlines like, "Take a Lesbian to Lunch." She stuck posters on a number of buildings in Milwaukee's Third Ward, including those housing gay owned businesses and organizations including the M&M Club, Dish, The Milwaukee LGBT Community Center and the WI Light among others.

Some people were outraged by what they considered vandalism, others felt the posters continued a long tradition of activism and civil disobedience. Either way, Sneed never expected the reaction she received.

Originally from Dallas, Sneed was raised in a Christian Fundamental home. She earned a degree in art from the University of Texas at Austin. At 45, Sneed has been active in LGBT rights organizations for over 20 years. In 1972, she helped start the first campus recognized gay organization in the state of Texas. Sneed later moved to Madison in 1989 and nine months ago moved to Milwaukee.

Recently, at IN Step's World Headquarters, I spoke with Sneed about her poster project, the subsequent controversy and its aftermath.

IN STEP: I understand you previously put these posters up in Madison. It apparently went over big there...

RS: Yeah! Apparently (laughter). I started the poster project while I was still in graduate school. The first three posters were put up anonymously. In fact, I had a pseudonym by the name of Rebecca Dagger, and the first one was "When did you first find out you were straight?" It was a heterosexual embrace. It was actually a picture of a man and a woman, because the sex of this person is ambiguous.

I put them up all over campus late one night. The buzz the next day was kind of amazing. People were wondering, "What does this mean?" and the dialogue began. Some people asked me — because they knew I was doing this type of work — if I knew who did it. After that, I decided the posters needed to be less ambiguous and more out and clear.

The second one was, "Take a Lesbian to Lunch," and I poured over hundreds of photographs from the lesbian archives to pick an eclectic mix of black and white and Jewish lesbians. I have some famous and not-so-famous people. This work does not get just pulled out of the air. There's a lot of forethought that goes into it and sometimes it takes literally months to get the kind of look I'm looking for to put into the work.

This was in Madison, in the UW area. I went around the campus — and not just the art department, although I started there — I did all around Bascomb Hill and over where the sororities and the fraternities are. I went up and down Langdon St., which is definitely a homophobic area. Then I began to get all kinds of feedback about it. I would hear dialog, and it was both homophobic and hostile as well as supportive and complimentary.

The other part of the project that I'd like to mention is that people began writing on these, and I have probably over 500 slides of the documentation of this poster project spanning almost nine years, now.

IN STEP: Is this an on-going project?

RS: It has been — but it may have come to an abrupt halt here in Milwaukee (laughter).

IN STEP: What happened here in Milwaukee?

RS: I'm telling you that I never ever, ever expected the response I got from putting them in the Third Ward here. I started putting up here only about a week and a half before PrideFest.

It started when I moved to Milwaukee and thought, "Milwaukee hasn't seen any of these. Maybe I'll hit the streets and see how they go over here." I put a poster up at UWM and on Downer Avenue. Then hit the Third Ward and the Water Street area a couple of months later.

IN STEP: Was intentional that posters were put up on the Pride Parade route?

RS: Absolutely! That was the idea. I have found out over time that it's not only an education for straights, but it is as much about empowerment for myself and my community. That's the response I got in Madison where the project was initiated.

IN STEP: Initially, there had been some confusion I heard some people say it was Ralph Ovadal and his gang, others said it was the Lesbian Avengers.

RS: The night that I was putting them up over on 2nd St., I did run into a couple of the Avengers and they thought this was a fantastic idea. My thought on it is that they probably liked my idea and started putting up some of their own work.

I have not seen any of the posters they put up, but it seems as though some people seemed to think there was pornographic material put up by me — apparently a poster of two women in a state of undress or in leather — as you can see my work is not anything like that. There was apparently some postering done after I started this.

IN STEP: It's created quite a controversy. How do you feel about that?

RS: That's what you can expect sometimes when you put up controversial work you can expect that there will be some controversy about it. The part that was shocking to me was that it came from my own community. I would expect this from straight people that [they] would be incensed about this being on their buildings.

IN STEP: Some of the criticism that I've heard awas that even if it was Leonardo da Vinci who was putting up posters, it was still vandalism because it's on people's private property.

RS: Understood! Does it also mean then, that because it's on your property that you're endorsing it? A lot of posters or things that are put up and it doesn't mean that business owner is endorsing that. Am I correct?

I'm just wondering if the reason it caused such a controversy is because there's such strong assimilation movement taking place here. That some people don't want to let folks know [that they are gay] ... or possibly some ugly internalized homophobia reared it's head. I haven't been in this community long, so I don't really know. However, I know that there's the buzz about, "We're just getting this LGBT community together, so don't rock the boat. We're just becoming established, respectable business people."

I understand that and I apologize if I have made anyone uncomfortable about that. That was not my intention.

IN STEP: The feedback that I've received from some people has been more along the lines of that it wasn't necessarily the message that was on the poster, but it was the fact that it was vandalism.

RS: Okay. Let's take this at a different angle, then. And you're right, I guess I have to say yes, in fact, if it's putting up something without a person's permission, then I suppose it is, yes. And I own it. You also need to know that activists sometimes in the past didn't ask permission. It's not necessarily about putting things up in a way that asks the public's permission because of the visibility factor.

I understand that probably in the Third Ward — and many of these business owners may have put them in their windows being made visible to the public. However, in my experience in the past, is that if knock on doors and ask, "Will you put these up?" very frequently they say they will and they don't. Or in fact, they put 'em inside. They say, "Sure, we'll be glad to put them inside on a bulletin board or something."

This is an outside project, thus the visibility factor. It's for straight people to see because wouldn't ordinarily go to a gay show or view art that would visibly represent the gay and lesbian community. I understand that they would be angry, that it was put up without their permission. But, there is an activist part of it ... activists don't ask permission. That's what makes it 'in your face.' It's sort of like, "We're here we're queer. Get used to us!"

I know that it takes a few minutes to wash them off. I've heard the buzz that it was put up with airplane glue. That is not true, it was put up, with watered-down wheat paste, which is actually rather easy to wash off with soap and water.

I've been asked, "How do you feel about a working class person having to take the time to go out and wash that off?" I guess my initial response to that was, "Then he or she gets to see it as they're washing it off. They get to process what that means to them and maybe in the meantime three or four other people saw it before it came down."

IN STEP: So, you're really trying to push buttons, then. It's kind of a cross between art and activism.

RS: I suppose it would be, yes. The work is in no way pornographic and I don't really know that it is offensive in and of itself. The photographs alone are not offensive, they're just portraits of people. I suppose it would push some folks buttons.

For example, one is my rebuttal to the Christian Right, which has the actual sheet music of "Jesus Loves the Little Children" on it. It says, "All the children of the world. Red and yellow, black and gay."

Well, somebody might say, "How can you possibly say a child would be gay? How can you put gay and children in the same picture?" For some people this [poster] would be very button pushing, and for others it would be very empowering. Some people get a big kick out of these posters. I even faxed one poster to the White House.

It's like, you've got "Take a Secretary to Lunch Week." So, why not "Take a Lesbian to Lunch Week?" It's kind of a tongue in cheek, and I think if you incorporate humor into it, it helps to facilitate learning.

IN STEP: Are you in trouble now?

RS: Yeah! What I have done is sometimes equated to something like graffiti. But I like to think about people like the Gorilla Girls, who are an action group of women who go out at night — dressed in gorilla suits — and put up posters that have confronted the art world for the last twenty years in New York.

It may sound silly, but over years and years of putting up those posters and educating people in the art world about the sexism that exists — some change has been taken place. The Gorilla Girls made a name for themselves by doing just this sort of action in New York City. However, the climate is no doubt very different there.

I recently talked to a friend of mine who is very familiar with post-modern discourse and she said, "Well! Milwaukee is rather conservative. Not rather — it IS very conservative — and the way the community could probably see these would be in nice frames on a wall in a gallery, which is the way you look at art." That would raise it to the level of high art and that's the way a lot of people can look at these pieces more palatably. It's possible — rather there's no doubt — that that's the way I maybe should have displayed them originally.

Now that this has taken place, I hope that possibly I still can exhibit these posters with the slides that accompany them. I've made some T-shirts with a couple of these images like, "Look Mom, No Grooms" on a shirt. I notice that one of my ardent fans had one of my shirts on at the LGBT couples reception the other night. I have sold these as posters and shirts in the past very inexpensively in addition to giving them away.

It's more about spreading the word around and kind of putting positive images out there that we don't see. I'm very sorry that it turned into a negative thing.

IN STEP: I have heard some people say that if you had apologized and offered to clean them off there probably wouldn't have been as big of a problem.

RS: The reason I didn't immediately do that was because of a very uncanny set of circumstances. The day after an article about the postering was published in the WI Light, I was hired by that newspaper to be a half-time sales, half-time graphic designer. I was afraid that I would lose my position if I came out as being the one because they had come out so strongly against the posters.

It was their editor, Bill Meunier who originally called the police and Meunier who also hired me. So, there I am — working with him — and there's this whole controversy going on about my posters. I felt that I needed to come clean with him and I did — and I did offer to go clean off their building.

Shortly after I told Meunier that I was, indeed, the person responsible, I was called at home and told that my services would no longer be needed. I hesitate in some ways to make an issue out of that. Of course, I do feel that [the postering] had something to do with it. Not because they were angry about the vandalism, but I think they might have been afraid that it would hit them in the pocketbook. I would be going out and selling ads to the very community that might be pressing charges. How would that look for the WI Light? I guess there's a remote chance that it may have affected them financially, or that it might have affected their sales. I don't know.

But, the other part of it is that they have had a huge turnover there. The man that was working with me was overwhelmed and overwrought. He didn't seem to have time to train me, and there seemed to be other things going on. I did feel kind of crappy because I thought I had good enough standing at [WI Light] that telling the truth about the posters would not cause me to lose my job. On the other hand because of my honesty and the kind of person I am, I wanted to come clean.

IN STEP: What kind of legal trouble are you in?

RS: I did get a letter from the police department and I called the officer back that requested I do so. I have not had a return call from him. My feeling about it is that since I came clean to the editor of WI Light, there's been no pursuance on the part of the police. They have not contacted me since the initial contact and that's been more than three weeks ago.

IN STEP: What do you hope comes of this?

RS: I've done a lot of thinking about this. If I apologize to the community at large or to the people that are offended, then it's almost taking back the idea of the activist way in which they were put up. However, I didn't mean to offend anyone, and in that way I guess I thought I was going to get a different reaction than the one I got.

IN STEP: Has it been difficult for you personally?

RS: Yes. I don't want to start off on the wrong foot with this community. But, there's nothing like coming out of the closet with a bang. But, making myself visible in a big way may not be so favorable.

After giving it some thought and thinking that maybe I should have checked out the climate more, would that have stopped me from doing it in that part of town. On the other hand, what have I heard in the lesbian community: "I think you put 'em up exactly where they needed to go."

IN STEP: Really?

RS: Oh yeah, someone said to me, "Why don't you put 'em up out in the suburbs where they need to see them?" The response that I heard from a friend was, "I think they went exactly where they needed to go."

IN STEP: Why?

RS: Because it's a strong belief by many that this is about homophobia. That in fact it's that "Don't rock the boat. We know we're gay and people around here know we're gay, but let's not tell everybody we're gay. You slap this up on my front window, you're sayin', 'Hey, we're gay!'"

That's kind of the response I've gotten because I put 'em up all over and other people don't necessarily react the same way. The severe over-reaction that I got — and I have to say that it wasn't from everyone over there either. A number of the businesses just washed 'em off and said, "Oh well." I think it was just a few that were pretty upset about it.

IN STEP: How do you see yourself integrating this into the community?

RS: I think I'm part of the community no matter what happens. I guess I need to make my art visible in a different way. I will probably go into more acceptable means. But honestly, I have lived in many cities and I have to say that Milwaukee has a more homophobic type of environment.

It's the feeling I get just walking in the grocery stores or just being out in the community. It's a very different feeling and I think that affects our community. No wonder people are paranoid and scared. It's an overall kind of oppressive feeling about the acceptance of gay people becoming more and more visible in the city of this size, and it's surprising to me.

I'd love to put these posters all over on Brookfield Square or wherever. If you're shopping on the West Side and you pull up in a parking structure and there is [a poster] with "Look Mom, No Groom" or some kind of gay-friendly poster ... or some gay-friendly anything out in the world, would you be incensed by it? Or, would you be amused secretly inside, or would you feel safer and like there's somebody else out there in the world with you? Or, do you say to yourself, "Oh that poor straight business owner is going to have to wash that off."

IN Step: What I hear you saying is that some LGBT people might be upset because they want to assimilate to the non-gay culture rather than have to deal with this kind of "In Your Face" activism...

RS: That's exactly what it is. I'm not saying that I can sit here as a radical lesbian feminist and make it any different. What I might say to another person would be, "Well, then you tell me how to do this!" It is a homophobic world in which we live and there's so much violence against gay and lesbian people still happening. Do you take the back seat on the bus and become friends with the bus driver, or do you come up front and refuse to sit at the back of the bus anymore? My feeling about it is that there's a place for all of us. That's kind of what I was doing when I put [the posters] up.

IN Step: Is there anything you want to say to the people who were upset?

RS: Yeah! I want to say that I am sorry if I offended anyone. I would like to make a public apology. If I offended, or in any way jeopardized anyone's reputation in the Third Ward ... I'm sorry about it. I do feel badly if I've offended anyone with the work. That was not my intention. I want to make it clear that in no way was any of [my work] pornographic. I didn't know that the Avengers were going to come and tag on. However, I guess there's no way you can control that when you're out on the street doing street art. I would still like to have the support of the community and maybe make the posters more accessible in a more acceptable way. ▼

In The Eye of the Beholder...

by William Attewell of the IN Step staff

While Rebeka Sneed is insistent that her posters are art that confronts uncomfortable living in a patriarchal society, others are just as convinced they are an act of vandalism.

"The community center was one of the buildings that was hit with the posters," Neil Albrecht, Executive Director of the Milwaukee LGBT Community Center told IN Step.

"Our landlord came to the door after it happened and was very agitated and interpreted the action as vandalism — actually believing the community center had done the postering," recalled Albrecht.

Recently, I had a conversation with [Sneed] and I understand the activism part of it, but in this case her actions really compromised the community center's relationships with our neighbors. It [the posters] actually jeopardized our ability to hold a recent block party event that required neighborhood cooperation."

The community center was not the only building hit by Sneed. A total of at least 15 buildings were targeted including a number of gay owned businesses.

"We got hit too and I was very angry to say the least," M&M Club owner Bob Schmidt told IN Step.

"Many other businesses that were hit started pointing the finger at me because I am the gay bar in the area. People in the Third Ward were very upset. And I don't blame them — count me in," stated Schmidt.

"People were outraged," said Einar Tangen, president of the Third Ward Association, an organization of area businesses and property owners. "Imagine coming to your place of business and finding that on your building. It was terrible."

Cleaning costs to remove the posters ran more than $2,000 according to Tangen and remnants of some of the posters can still be found on some buildings. Soon after the posters went up, there was a family-oriented event being held in Third Ward. In the opinion of Schmidt and others, some of the poster images were not suitable for children. Sneed maintains that none of her posters were pornographic, and blames any pornographic posters on copycats and despite heated criticism she does have many supporters.

"My only regret was that there was so many people upset in the gay community," said local activist Margaret Flood. "I think it was nice to see 'Take a Lesbian to Lunch' on Locust St. and after that poster went up, someone did take me to lunch. But the truth is Madison and Milwaukee are just two different towns."

But while Sneed and others believe that her posters to be art, both Schmidt and Tangen believe what is or isn't art is in the eye of the beholder.

"What is art to one person is not necessarily art to me," says Schmidt. "Nor does art give someone the right to plaster posters on someone else's building."

"Why did she have to do it under the cover of darkness? It was done at night because she knew it was wrong and knew it was against the law," concludes Schmidt.

"I don't think art is supposed to hurt people or business. Art is not something that you impose on other people," stated Tangen. "She didn't get permission to start plastering those on peoples windows and I don't know any legitment artists who would do something like that."

"The least she could have done is called and offered to take the posters off and apologize," adds Schmidt.

The Very Essence of Discrimination

by Bill Turner

It's always useful to get back to basics from time to time. In the amazing welter of topics surrounding lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender civil rights during the 1990s, we run some risk of losing sight of the most basic issue — equal opportunity and equal treatment.

But, just when we might start to forget what we're about, some new event comes along to remind us.

The recent New Jersey Boy Scouts case gets to the basic issue of discrimination — does any employer have a legitimate reason to refuse to hire, to fire, or otherwise to discriminate against lesbian, gay, bisexual, or transgender persons? Is a person's sexual or gender identity — all by itself — sufficient reason to disregard that person's other qualities and accomplishments?

If you haven't heard, James Dale, an Eagle Scout, applied to his local council to become an adult leader. The council accepted him, but withdrew the position when they learned from a newspaper story that Dale is gay.

In other words, the Boy Scouts want to claim that gay identity, all by itself, is enough to prevent a person from being a good Boy Scout.

Immediately this puts the Boy Scouts in the same quandary the military is in: how did Dale (or Magarethe Cammemeyer, or any of the other examples) manage to serve with such distinction in the organization if his sexual orientation so clearly unfits him for service? The Boy Scouts are saying, in effect, that you can't be gay and a good boy scout at the same time. If that's so, then how did Dale get to be an Eagle Scout, and accepted for a position as an adult leader? What about the news that he is gay suddenly overrode all of his accomplishments?

Or, to put the question another way — which judgment of Dale's (or Cammemeyer's) abilities should we accept? The first one, according to which each of these individuals is an exemplary member of their organization, embodying the principles that the organization wishes to uphold? Or the second one, according to which they are both so patently incapable of living up to the organization's standards that it should expel them immediately?

I submit that the problem here lies, not with Dale or Cammemeyer, but with the capacity for judgment of the leaders who choose to expel them. Using sexual orientation as a total bar to membership in the organization suggests that it bears some relationship to the person's ability to perform the duties of membership. Dale, Cammemeyer, and countless other Boy Scouts and soldiers have given the lie to this proposition.

American author Ralph Waldo Emerson was quite right when he wrote that "Unthinking consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds." Consistency for its own sake is not worth striving for.

On the other hand, the basic definition of discrimination is gross inconsistency in the application of standards to individual cases. For many years our nation proclaimed that "all men are created equal," yet allowed some men to own others as slaves. Concern for such inconsistency is far more than the hobgoblin of little minds.

No LGBT person in the 1990s suffers anything like what slaves suffered in antebellum America, but the basic concept remains the same. After the Civil War, our nation amended its Constitution to guarantee to all citizens the "equal protection of the laws" — in other words, basic consistency in applying the principles of our government to everyone.

Like most simple principles, it can be terribly difficult to live up to, but such are the basics that we need to get back to — or move forward to. ▼

Back To School Rush Raises Safety Issues

by Kerry Lobel, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force

More than 50 million young people in grades kindergarten through 12 trek back to school this month. They bring with them the concerns of their parents and their communities over the issue of school safety.

Seeing the flood of back-to-school stories on the local news, I sense that something — or someone — is missing from this picture.

Specifically, five million someones. That's the number of estimated number of GLBTQ (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered or questioning) students in our public schools. For them, safety is an everyday concern.

Right now, our nation is having a public discussion over what to do about violence in the schools. President Clinton held a summit. Columbine, Colorado officials put in place a policy of "zero tolerance" for harassment and taunting. Many are pointing fingers at the entertainment industry or the gun industry or the Internet. Republicans and Democrats, in typical fashion, are pointing fingers at each other.

But once again, our voices are left out of the debate. Our voices are enriched by painful experience, for who among us can forget the frequency with which epithets like "fag" and "dyke" are casually tossed around on the playground, in the school cafeteria, in the locker room, even in the school classroom.

What can be done? The good news is progress can — and is — being made to protect our schoolchildren. In the state of New York, for example, legislators this summer filed (but have not yet passed) the Dignity for All Students Act, which would direct schools to adopt policies to create a safe school environment for all students. The proposal would revise state curriculum requirements to include human relations education. This curriculum would enable students to foster an appreciation of people of different sexual orientations as well as different racial or religious backgrounds.

In the state of California, legislators defeated similar legislation by one vote. That was disappointing, but the bill progressed further than ever before, and I am hopeful California and New York will join Connecticut, Massachusetts and Wisconsin in protecting their students.

What can you do? Demand that your school district adopt policies that protect students and teachers from harassment and discrimination; provide staff with workshops and training; support curricula that includes information about the lives and contributions of GLBT people; and allow for the formation of gay-straight alliances and other clubs that address homophobia and heterosexism in school.

As the award-winning documentary producer Debra Chasnoff ("It's Elementary") taught us, children are not born with bigotry and intolerance — they learn it. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we used back-to-school season as a platform to address safety for our children? Five million children are waiting for us to act. ▼

Hotline Hot Potato

To the Editor—

You are correct in wishing for an "official" LGBT information service. The Gay Information Services (GIS) has sought out financial support from Cream City Foundation for many years and [is] always turned down with no explanation, even though they require endless hours of applications, financial disclosures, etc.

As director of GIS, I've approached the director of GPU Hotline (whatever that means, especially in light of the fact that there is no organization such as GPU any more, nor has there been for over a decade) to inquire how we could cooperate, and even move toward bringing all of this together — no cooperation has been forthcoming in the past five years.

At our last meeting, I asked how they paid for their hotline and was informed that a former founder of GPU had left money in his estate, which was paying for a line that was not proving essential any longer.

It is also evident that you and IN Step are unaware that for the past several years I worked to meet with the former co-presidents of the (what was and became) LGBT Community Center. I was put off continuously by the first them, and only after several written and phone attempts, did then LGBT co-president (and now Executive Director), Neil Albrecht meet with me.

One issue discussed at length was the desire of GIS to achieve your wish of having the community center take over this function, as it was the only thing that made sense. I communicated that after 13 years of begging for money for an essential community function, I was tired and could no longer afford to personally, economically underwrite this program.

GIS has provided 24-hour service (returning all calls both near and across the nation) for all of this time without recognition and much negative feedback from "recent community leaders" who neither knew anything personally about the work of GIS, nor its myself.

Visualize not merely your house phone, fax machine, cell phone and the GIS line ringing 24 hours per day, 7 day per week. Visualize returning phone calls from vacation spots because there were no volunteers ... ah, the old Native American saying, "... until you have walked for 1 mile in another's moccasins ..."

I have been working to make your wish come to fruition for several years — it can still happen and I will work to do everything possible. Will you and your readers?

Ralph F. Navarro,
Director of Gay Information Services

The "Other Side of the Story"

by Christopher Ott

This morning when the alarm went off, Wisconsin Public Radio broadcast a report about Milwaukee's new domestic-partner registry. The report explained the basics about the registry, but then gave details about a lawsuit to halt it, filed by an organization calling itself the Christian Civil Liberties Union. The announcer matter-of-factly cited the group's opposition to "special rights for homosexuals."

This was a demonstration of one of journalism's most destructive myths: that in order for a story to be objective, it has to have two sides.

The problem with this well-intentioned quest for fairness is that some stories don't have two sides, or at least not two sides of equal merit. It's part of a journalist's job to recognize this, and if they can't, it's up to us to explain it to them in calls and letters to their station or publication.

The usual reason this happens is one of two things.

Sometimes, reporters want to protect themselves against charges that they have written a one-sided story, and so they search out someone--anyone--who has an opposing viewpoint. They plug that into the story, and voilà, the story has "balance."

Another way that the same thing happens is when journalists simply don't know much about the issue (and in fairness, no one can be an expert in everything) and are too trusting of the sources. They assume the sources know what they are talking about.

The result is that this morning, I ended up listening to the views on homosexuality of a man who doesn't even know what homosexuality is. This is not objective reporting, it's sloppy, cover-the-journalist's-ass reporting that ignores the reality of the situation. The real story here is the day-in, day-out discrimination that gay people face because of what other people imagine about us. To give equal time to the ignoramuses who are responsible for that discrimination in the first place presents a completely distorted picture of what is really going on.

Journalists already recognize this need to be more careful when they research and write their stories about some other issues, and we need to make gay equality one of them. For example, if a new Jewish community center opens, reporters don't bother to seek out the views of local anti-Semites who believe there is an international Zionist conspiracy, all in the name of giving the story "balance." If an NAACP convention is in town, responsible reporters don't run to local klansmen for soundbites. If a new dinosaur fossil is discovered, reporters — except maybe in Kansas — don't worry about bias if they haven't included the views of creationists who calculate that the Earth was created one sunny morning 6,000 years ago.

Running to anti-gay nutcases every time there's news about a baby-step in the direction of gay equality is no different from any of these examples above. In the name of avoiding bias, journalists are actually biasing their stories by failing to make the necessary judgments about their sources.

This doesn't mean that the views of people and organizations that aren't "politically correct" should be censored or excluded, but it does mean that they should be explained and presented for what they are: a troubling phenomenon, not just an equal but opposing viewpoint. Journalists need to stop assuming that anti-gay activists have even the most rudimentary understanding of what they're talking about.

We need to hold local stations and papers accountable for this, but maybe we can take some consolation from the fact

JOURNALISTS NEED TO STOP ASSUMING THAT ANTI-GAY ACTIVISTS HAVE
EVEN THE MOST RUDIMENTARY
UNDERSTANDING OF WHAT THEY'RE

that this is all part of a much larger problem: the myth of the "liberal media." Conservatives have done a good job over the last few years of convincing people that the media has a liberal bias, and even reporters sometimes second-guess themselves, going the extra mile to include conservative voices, no matter how dubious.

But when conservatives complain about the "liberal media," what they're really complaining about is a media that's doing its job: questioning and criticizing. And what we need to begin complaining about more loudly is that the media must do this job of questioning and criticizing better, because when they do, they'll see that we're in the right. Reporters need to do their homework on gay issues, understand the true role of anti-gay activists as a weird, marginal phenomenon, and stop plugging in the ravings of whatever homophobic nincompoop they can find as "the other side of the story." ▼

IN STEP CAPTIOOL VIEW

by State Representative Mark Pocan

Milwaukee On The Move

Congratulations to the people of Milwaukee for their many recent successes. Over the past couple of months Milwaukee has shown us what commitment, organization, activism and hard work can accomplish. The Domestic Partnership registry passed, PrideFest was a great success and the Human Rights League - Political Action Committee (HRL-PAC) had a tremendous kick off event.

I had the pleasure to participate in Milwaukee PrideFest. It is always energizing to be a part of such a large, powerful and peaceful group of people coming together for positive change. I appreciate the hospitality extended to me throughout the weekend.

Upcoming Equal Rights Legislation

My hope is that we can take this Milwaukee momentum and use the energy to capitalize on issues at the state level. In the next few months there are plans to introduce (are you listening Ralph Overdahl?) equal rights legislation, Domestic Partnership and adoption rights, which will affect gays and lesbians throughout the State. Since there is an opportunity for extreme (F)right wingers to make money on these issues I anticipate some hate mongering by the likes of Ralph Overdahl. As is his pattern he will most likely attempt to derail these issues and make a few bucks fundraising.

We must be prepared to voice our beliefs so that the minority view of the preaching for profit contingent of the far right does not drown out the voices of the majority of Wisconsin Citizens that favor fair and equal treatment for all.

Over the next few months as issues progress it is important that everyone takes the time to get involved in the process. If you are interested in helping out with the organizational aspects of promoting legislation dealing with domestic partnership benefits and adoption rights please give my office a call.

Love One Another As ... I Have Spurned You?

While attending Milwaukee PrideFest I had the opportunity to encounter the protesters at the gate. Having met Ralph Overdahl at a television taping a few weeks back I thought that I would go over and say hello to Ralph. As I approached I extended my hand only to be rebuffed by Ralph. He looked at my hand and stated "I don't know when the last time you washed it was" and refused to greet me. Now, I may not know how to define a Christian but I do know what one isn't when I see one.

After a taping of a show dealing with the Mazo Beach issue I was able to discuss with Ralph my thoughts on his motivation for his hate mongering. I expressed that I Truly believe that he is spreading hate not because of his religious beliefs but because he can make a buck at it. I once again asked him to open up his financial records. He became visibly disturbed. Let's hear it one more time! Open your books Ralph if you have nothing to hide.

P.S. Ralph, thanks for dropping 1000 attack pieces on me in my district. The support calls I received were overwhelming.

If you have any question or comments please feel free to contact me: e-mail mark.pocan@legis.state.wi.us <mailto:Mark.Pocan@legis.state.wi.us> or call 1-608-266-8571 or write State Capitol #418 North, P.O. Box 8953 Madison, WI 53708.

Until next month. ▼

Queer Auction Block

Just when you thought you had your Internet addiction under control here comes another new Web site trying to capitalize on the world-wide phenomenon of on-line trading, this time with a queer twist. Rainbow Auction at www.rainbowauction.com is an ebay-style auction site featuring over 20 categories unique to the LGBT community such as commitment ceremony supplies, leather and fetish gear, and original art.

Bidders pay no fees to participate and sellers are charged nominal listing and completion fees. The Rainbow Auction has all the features familiar to users of other on-line auctions such as ebay, Yahoo and Amazon.com, but provides a homo-friendly environment and interface.

It also provides a service to members of the queer community to feature their art work, music and videos, collectibles and commercial products to their own community of buyers.

My only question—where do you start the bidding on used leather thongs?

Gaiety Prevails in Paris

The French tourism office is now offering, for the first time, a "gay friendly travel planner" in an effort to attract lesbian and gay tourists to the country.

The free brochure, "Gay Friendly France," is aptly subtitled, "Liberte, Egalite, Diversite" — a take-off on the French revolutionary slogan "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

The full-color brochure is 24 pages long and covers a wide range of tips and information aimed at attracting lesbians and gay men to visit Paris and the provinces.

The travel guide includes listings, activities of interest, groups — even Web sites that could be helpful to tourists planning to visit the country. It also includes biographic sketches of noted lesbians and gays with strong links to France, from Jean Cocteau to Gertrude Stein.

The guide can be picked up at the French Government Tourist Offices in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, or by writing to: Gay Friendly France, French Government Tourist Office, P.O. Box 386, Bohemia, N.Y. 11716, or by calling them at (410) 286-8310. You can also request a copy via email at info@francetourism.com noting that you want a copy of "Gay Friendly France" and including your return name and address.

'Late Late Show' Crosses the Line

CBS' Late Late Show host Craig Kilborn, who previously hosted The Daily Show on Comedy Central, historically has been sensitive to the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) community on his television programs. Two months ago, however, Kilborn made a derogatory remark about our community. GLAAD met with Late Late Show Executive Producer Billy Kimble in August to express concerns about Kilborn's on-screen comments. Kimble apologized for the comments, and promised to work with Kilborn to ensure that such comments would not be aired in the future.

But on his Aug. 25 program, Kilborn again made derogatory comments, this time directed toward LGBT television representations. "(GLAAD) says that 28 gay or bisexual, transgendered characters on TV is not enough," Kilborn said. "There's not enough gay or lesbians on TV next year. In response, some of the networks have decided — some new programs for the fall, including '2 Guys and 2 More Guys,'

'Touched by a Florist,' and 'Suddenly Sodomy.'"

GLAAD says that such comments trivialize the need for inclusive LGBT representations on television, and are especially inappropriate in light of the overall lack of diversity on the fall television lineup. If Kilbourn is pissing you off, let the Late Late Show and CBS know by contacting: Mr. Billy Kimble, Executive Producer, The Late Late Show, c/o Worldwide Pants Inc., 7800 Beverly Blvd., Suite 244, Los Angeles, CA 90036, fax: 323.575.5662.

Spend a 'Night Out' with the Milwaukee Rep and Shakespeare's 'Twelfth Night'

Milwaukee — Milwaukee Repertory Theater is proud to present Twelfth Night, Shakespeare's magical tale of shipwrecks, mistaken identity, and love at first sight. Twelfth Night's many melodies: bright and somber, raucous and bittersweet, elegant and pompous, will be brought to life September 10 through October 10 in the Quadracci Powerhouse Theater in the Patty and Jay Baker Theater Complex.

Nite Out

The Sept. 14 performance will mark the launch of a new tradition for Milwaukee's LGBT community — it is called Nite OUT. The very first Nite OUT, will be held in conjunction with a special benefit for Milwaukee's LGBT Community Center. Tickets for the benefit can be purchased directly from the center, by calling (414) 271-2656.

Nite OUT is ground-breaking partnership between IN Step and the Milwaukee Repertory Theater. In the same spirit as the popular Gallery Night and First Fridays, Nite OUT promises to be a special evening for our community to come together and to enjoy a night of theater and fellowship as well as a night out on the town.

Tickets to other performances of this delightful comedy, featuring original music by Present Music, can be purchased in-person at the Milwaukee Rep Box Office at 108 E. Wells Street, or by phone at (414) 224-9490.

The Story

Shakespeare's final comedy, "Twelfth Night" takes place on the imaginary island of Illyria where Viola washes ashore after a shipwreck. Assuming that her twin brother has died in the storm, she dresses as a man so that she can be admitted to the court of Duke Orsino, who is madly in love with Olivia. Olivia, in turn, falls head over heels for Cesario, who's really Viola, who's really in love with Orsino, but can't let on because she's too busy being a man. Romantic schemes and comic misadventures abound until ultimately love prevails and all is set right.

Often referred to as Shakespeare's "musical comedy," Milwaukee Rep's production of Twelfth Night will feature original music composed by Present Music's Eric Segnitz. Three on-stage musician: Ravenna Helson; Brett Lipshutz; and Kim Robertson, will perform live from the set's second floor balcony during performances.

The first Shakespearean work to be performed at the Rep since "The Merchant Of Venice" ('94/'95 season), Twelfth Night will be directed by Milwaukee Rep Artistic Director Joseph Hanreddy. Hanreddy has been The Rep's Artistic Director since '93. During the '98/'99 season, he directed productions of "Amadeus" and "Force Of Nature," and co-adapted and directed "A Christmas Carol."

The Cast

Milwaukee Rep resident company members featured in Twelfth Night are: Laura Gordon (Olivia) who appeared in last season's Quadracci Powerhouse Theater production of "Force Of Nature," as well as the Stiemke Theater production of "Resident, Alien and Rocket Man," and "A Christmas Carol;" Richard Halverson (Malvolio) who was most recently seen in last season's Quadracci Powerhouse Theater production of "Amadeus;" Torrey Hanson (Sir Andrew Aguecheek) whose Quadracci Powerhouse Theater appearances include last season's "Amadeus," "Picasso At The Lapin Agile," and "Servant Of Two Masters;" James Pickering (Sir Toby Belch) whose credits for the '98/'99 season include "Picasso At The Lapin Agile," "Force Of Nature," "Resident Alien," and Ebenezer Scrooge in "A Christmas Carol;" Rose Pickering (Maria) who appeared in last season's Quadracci Powerhouse Theater productions of "The Last Night Of Ballyhoo," "Picasso At The Lapin Agile," and "Force Of Nature," as well as the Stiemke Theater production of "The Glass Menagerie;" and Kristen Potter (Viola) who was seen last season in "Amadeus" and "Force Of Nature" on the Quadracci Powerhouse stage, "The Glass Menagerie" and "Rocket Man" on the Stiemke Theater stage, and "A Christmas Carol" at the Pabst Theater.

Returning to The Rep are Jamie Bennett (Sebastian) who was seen in "Over The Tavern" during the '97/'98 season; Al Espinosa (Orsino) who appeared in the '94/'95 production of "The Merchant Of Venice;" and Michael Herold (Fabian) whose credits include the Stackner Cabaret productions of "Quality Time," "Under The Hollywood Sign," and "Consumer Affairs."

Making their Milwaukee Rep debut are Charles Dean (Feste/Sea Captain) a company member and associate artist at Berkeley Repertory Theatre for 20 years who has appeared in 80 production; and Lamont Thompson (Antonio) who last appeared in Milwaukee in First Stage Milwaukee's productions of "Frog And Toad Forever" and "Roll Of Thunder," "Hear My Cry."

Tickets to Twelfth Night range from $5.00 to $36.00. Students and senior-citizens with proper I.D. may purchase half-price "rush tickets" 30 minutes prior to curtain for all Quadracci Powerhouse performances at The Rep Box Office. Danceworks Leaps into Fall with New Schedule

Milwaukee — Danceworks Performance Company (DPC) is barely settled in their new space at 1661 N. Water St., and they are ready to hit the stage for their third season of powerful, high-energy, contemporary dance.

The three-event season opens with an all-guest choreographer show Danceworks Dances, co-presented with Alverno Presents on Sept. 10 and 11 at the college's Pitman Theater, 3431 S. 39th St. Works by guest choreographers will include the choreography of Brian Jeffery (Chicago), Li Chiao-Ping (Madison), Janet Lilly (Milwaukee), Reggie Wilson (New York), and Catey Ott (New York). Tickets are $16, $14, $13 and $11 for students and seniors and are available at the Alverno Presents Box Office (414) 382-6044.

In between, DPC invites everyone to their new home at Studio 1661 for Home Cookin', a banquet of ten new works created for the occasion. Join them as they make themselves at home in their new space doing what they do best: creating and performing original work. Tickets are $12, $10 for seniors and students and are available at the Studio 1661 Box Office (414) 277-8480.

The season concludes on June 2 and 3, 2000 at 8 p.m. at the UW-Milwaukee School of the Arts Theater with Beginning to End, an evening-length collaboration with Milwaukee's own Present Music. According to co-conspirators Sarah Wilbur (DPC) and Kevin Stalhiem (Present Music), the concert will be "extremely" original on the dance end and "startlingly" diverse on the music end. Both evenings will be followed by a wild party for dancers, musicians, and audience members. Tickets for this event are $19 and $15. Please call the Studio 1661 Box Office at (414) 277-8480.

In addition to concert performing, DPC will continue to tour Portable Performances to schools and other community institutions in Southeastern Wisconsin. For more information on booking call (414) 277-8480, ext. 2. New classes begin Sept 13 and Dreamtime Expansion will be expanding its schedule of classes and workshops. "Hauptmann" Next Up for Next Act

Milwaukee — German immigrant Bruno Richard Hauptmann was linked to the kidnapping and murder of American aviation hero Charles Lindbergh's infant son in Hopewell, New Jersey. The nation wanted justice and was willing to get it at any price. Hauptmann was found guilty of the heinous act in "The Trial of the Century." But questions remain even today concerning his responsibility in the crime. Was he a cold-blooded murderer, or was he a victim of a media frenzy created to find the killer? Next Act Theater will take a stirring look at this riveting case by presenting "Hauptmann" on Sept. 9 through 26 at the Steimke Theater, 108 E. Wells St.

The play, written by Chicago playwright John Logan in 1986, won four Jefferson Citations including Outstanding New Work and Best Production. Making his debut as director with Next Act will be William Theisen. Theisen has directed locally for First Stage Milwaukee and Skylight Opera Theater. Next Act Associate Artistic Director C. Michael Wright will take on the role of Hauptmann. The rest of the impressive cast includes David Cesarini, Steven Kohler, Raeleen McMillion, Daniel Mooney, Michael Pocaro, and Terry Tuttle. Maureen Chavez-Krueger is the set designer, Dawna Gregory designs the costumes, Eric Appelon handles the lighting, and Lois Mytas designs the props.

Opening night is Friday, Sept. 10 at 8 p.m. Single tickets range from $18 to $26. One "Pay-What-You-Can" performance will be held on Monday, Sept. 20 at 7:30 p.m. Talkbacks with cast and experts in the legal and media fields will be held following performances on Sept. 12, 16, 17, 19, 22, and 23. Senior, student and group discounts are available. For more information, please call (414) 224-9490.

Murder & Mayhem at Afterwords

Milwaukee — Afterwords will present its third annual weekend of "Murder & Mayhem" on Oct. 1-3. The three day event features a series of author events at Afterwords including some of the biggest and brightest names of lesbian and gay mystery writers Milwaukee has ever seen!

Katherine Forrest

Starting things off will be the first appearance of Katherine Forrest in Milwaukee. The author of such popular lesbian novels as Curious Wine and Daughters of a Coral Dawn, Forrest is perhaps best known for her popular series featuring LAPD detective Kate Delafield.

In Sleeping Bones (Berkley Crime, HC $21.95), Forrest's seventh offering, Kate Delafield finds herself with a new partner as she searches for the murderer of a reclusive old man at the La Brea Tar Pits. Unknown to Kate, it is a murder with ancient consequences.

Saturday stars off at 11:30 a.m. with a "killer brunch" featuring Ellen Hart, R.D. Zimmerman and Lev Raphael, three of the genre's most devilishly clever practitioners.

Fans of Ellen Hart's Jane Lawless series have been eagerly awaiting her latest adventure, Hunting the Witch (St. Martin's Press, HC $24.95). Teamed up once again with her partner-in-investigation, Cordelia Thorn, Jane must unravel the murder of a man uncertainly connected to Jane's former lover and much to her surprise, to herself.

Joining Ellen Hart brunch is R.D. Zimmerman, author of the popular Todd Mills series. Outed after the murder of his lover in Closet, TV anchorman Todd Mills is no stranger to murder investigations. Zimmerman's fourth Todd Mills offering, Innuendo (Delacorte, HC $21.95) is due out later this fall.

Completing the brunch lineup is Lev Raphael, author of three Nick Hoffman mysteries, including the most recent, The Death of a Constant Lover (Walker, HC $23.95).

Later on Oct. 2 plans call for a "lethal tea" featuring another group of murderous writers including Val McDermid, Michael Craft and Mark Zubro.

Val McDermid is the author of both the Lindsey Gordon and the Kate Brannigan mystery series. In Conferences are Murder (Spinster's Ink, Pb $12.00), the fourth Lindsey Gordon mystery, Lindsey finds herself back in the United Kingdom and is the prime suspect in the death of an unethical union boss. In order to clear her name, Lindsey must find the real killer before she might too become a victim.

Michael Craft

This past summer has seen the release of Michael Craft's third Mark Manning mystery, Body Language (Kensington, HC $22.00). Leaving Chicago for a quiet little Wisconsin town, Mark Manning learns that not only are big cities dangerous, as he becomes the most likely suspect in the death of his own cousin.

Mark Zubro, author of two different gay murder mysteries is a long Afterwords favorite. In July, Zubro published his fifth Paul Turner mystery, Drop Dead (St. Martin's Press, HC $22.00). Gay cop Paul Turner has a hotel full of suspects when a handsome male supermodel falls to his death.

Prolific lesbian mystery writer, Claire McNab is also making a rare Milwaukee appearance at Afterwords during the 3rd Murder & Mayhem weekend, time to be announced. Set Up (Naiad, Pb $11.95) is McNab's 11th Carol Ashton mystery, was just released.

All of the above events will take place at Afterwords Bookstore. For further information on Afterwords 3rd Weekend of Murder & Mayhem, please call (414) 963-9089.

Crowe to Make U.S. Debut in Milwaukee

Haunting... Beautiful... Mesmerizing... These are all words that have been used to describe the music of Juno nominated singer/songwriter Susan Crowe. Exploring our complicated body and soul, her songs, so immaculately crafted, leave you not only with a feeling of longing and melancholy, but a great sense of beauty as well. Susan has recently released her third CD "A Pilgrim's Mirror."

The songs, the voice and the style are unmistakably

Crowe, and reflect a continuing path away from market driven trends. This is how the Vancouver Sun described Crowe: "With one of the most distinctive voices in Canada today, she is destined to become one of our lasting folk heroines." This new album looks like another solid step in that direction.

Crowe has made a name for herself with music that is quiet and understated, but her work packs an ferocious intensity of emotion and intellect that leaves the listener riveted to their seats. It took more than 20 years and a 13 year hiatus from music for her to be able to share such private reflections with an audience, but they have responded with heartfelt enthusiasm.

Growing up in a musical family in Cow Bay, Nova Scotia, Crowe was isolated from her peers at a young age and responded by starting to write songs around the age of 12. By 14, she was playing publicly in high schools and, after graduation, she started making a name for herself on the Maritime coffee house and festival circuit. However, as someone whose work was focused on honest self-revelation, Crowe again felt isolated in an industry that seemed obsessed with 'celebrity.' She also struggled with sharing her very private feelings with an audience.

Crowe left music in 1982 and focused on putting her partner through school with a series of service industry jobs ranging from waitressing to working for Canada Post. She only returned to music in 1993 with the idea that she would record a few of her songs for her own personal archives. However, the more she wrote, the more she felt the desire to try her hand at performing one more time. It wasn't long before the west coast's finest musicians were lining up to support her and her fan base quickly began multiplying.

Now in her forties, Crowe has found a new maturity and sense of herself that allow her bare her soul in public without losing herself in the spotlight. The journey to that place has resulted in music and performances that capture the listener on a profound level ... and a sense of empowerment that allows her to assert her own individual style with confidence. And she has never lost her dry maritime sense of humor that endears her to an audience.

In the heavily populated world of singer-songwriters, where there is stiff competition for attention, Crowe's music stands out from the crowd because of its sheer depth. More than just a 'confessionalist,' she is also committed to the craft of song-writing. While her writing betrays her interest in poetry and philosophy, it never loses sight of the song and it's architecture. She crafts quietly, showing a wisdom and introspection that only comes from living through loss and frequently feeling like an 'outsider,' but she never loses sight of the musicality of a song.

Crowe will be making her first American appearance Sept 18th at Centennial Hall, 733 North 8th Street. The show begins at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are available at Afterwords Books 2710 North Murray and Outpost Natural Foods 100 East Capitol Drive. Tickets will also be available at the door, the day of the show. Don't miss the debut performance of this up-and-coming Canadian singer/songwriter.

'Last Show of the Century' at MAM

Milwaukee — The Last Show of the Century: A History of the 20th Century through Its Art at the Milwaukee Art Museum (MAM), is the final in a series of four exhibitions that have examined the various artistic developments of the 20th century. Using works from the museum's permanent collection to tell the history of the last 100 years, The Last Show differs from the Art Museum's usual approach in that the works of art are not grouped together based on stylistic similarities or other interrelationships.

A time line will lead viewers through major historical events punctuated with newspaper headlines from the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, who is sponsoring the show. Artworks will illustrate, amplify or show influences of such milestones as the world wars, the Great Depression, the Holocaust, the Vietnam War and the civil rights movement. Newspaper photographs and illustrations will share equal billing with works by Picasso, Pollock and Warhol. Other themes represented include immigration, modern city life, the Harlem Renaissance, the 1960s and the counterculture movement, rock and roll, feminism, Generation X, and the AIDS epidemic.

The show will open in the Journal/Lubar Galleries on Friday, Sept. 10 and run through Jan. 2. For more information about the exhibition, call (414) 224-3200.

Cabaret Balkan

There's a scene in Goran Paskaljevic's Cabaret Balkan where a junior Travis Bickle (played by Nebojsa Glogovac) runs into a man he recognizes (Aleksander Bercek) at a Belgrade bar. Crippled and incontinent, the man is a former cop who recounts in excruciating detail the attack that now necessitates his having to drink beer through a straw. We learn a bag was placed over his head and 27 of his bones were broken with a crowbar and hammer. Naturally, we feel sorry for him.

Then we discover that the cabbie listening to this story is the guy that attacked him. And just as our bile is rising towards the cabbie, he explains the reason behind the attack. It seems that the cop had brutally beaten him up for no reason and it was in retaliation that he broke 27 of the cop's bones. So our sympathies switch from pitying the cop to applauding the cabbie.

But it's not as if we can sympathize totally with the cabbie. Here's a guy who takes time out from his job to further taunt his victim and mourn the fact that he didn't break thirty-two of his bones. And thus Cabaret Balkan constantly yanks us around, our identification with various characters continually vexed.

Over and over, Cabaret Balkan introduces us to someone we quickly revile but who will eventually be placed into a nightmarish situation that arouses our sympathy. Or vice-versa. A sickeningly jealous boyfriend accuses his girlfriend of flirting with a guy who just terrorized her on a bus. But moments later, he gets terrorized at gunpoint (along with his girlfriend again) by a psychotic cokehead. Two lifelong friends confess so many infidelities to one another that one winds up being stabbed to death by the other. All these episodes of horror are laid side by side never adding up to a story per se.

Needless to say, it doesn't make for a very pleasant night out at the cinema. Indeed, a friend remarked after a screening that the violence just grew tiresome after a while. Without situating the violence in a moral or psychological context, the film's serial structure only pointed to a director who was trying to out-horror himself with every scene.

There's some truth to that. Cabaret Balkan is narrow with precious little breathing room. But I view it as an allegory about shifting allegiances in the Balkans and all allegories are pretty airtight. No one balks at the knight playing chess with Death in The Seventh Seal. Why should we look down our noses at the characters' hyperbolic teeter-tottering between victim and oppressor? What we can do with this hyperbole, how we can use it in relation to America's own Balkanizations is another matter.

Frankenstein in Love

Presented by Dale Gutzman and Off the Wall Productions

In addition to being awfully handsome and an honest-to-gosh gay celebrity, Clive Barker is something of a Renaissance man. To his credit are numerous best-selling novels including The Great and Secret Show, Imajica and most recently, Galilee. He has been an actor and director for both the stage and the screen, playwright, screenwriter, film producer on the much-acclaimed Gods and Monsters as well as an accomplished painter.

Yet Clive Barker's name is nevertheless synonymous with all things horrifying, his Hellraiser and Candyman characters emerging as an indelible part of the horror genre tradition.

Frankenstein in Love, Barker's attempt at a "Grand Guignol" play, is a wickedly claustrophobic piece of theatre meant to shock, to thrill, to revolt and, yes, to enlighten.

Dale Gutzman has chosen a remarkable theatrical space, the basement of the Brumder Mansion, to house his production of Frankenstein in Love, although this reviewer would have preferred attending a performance on a cooler, autumn evening, perhaps during the bewitching season of Halloween.

Frankenstein in Love resists any and all attempts to offer a simple summary. At the center is the mysterious figure of Dr. Joseph Frankenstein (Dale Gutzman), a man who has been hounded to the far corners of the Earth by his most wondrous, monstrous creation, one President Garcia Heliodoro Perez (Robert Hirschi).

As the play opens, our tour guide for the last day of the world but one is the ghost of Maria Reina Duran (a deliciously mischievous Monica Degnan Hobler), who welcomes us to Dr. Frankenstein's basement. There we meet a curious assortment of characters, some are part of unspecified revolution, like Cockatoo (Brian Roloff), others the often befuddled "offspring" of Dr. Frankenstein, like the lovely Veronique (played by the lovely Julie Alonzo-Calteaux).

Less a traditional narrative than a series of philosophical riffs centered presumably upon the fabled "Seven Deadly Sins," Frankenstein in Love gleefully acquaints the audience with all manner of wickedness, beginning with cross-dressing, homosexuality and incest to cannibalism, pedophilia and even necrophilia.

Barker might deftly weave into his story any number of fascinating ideas and charismatic characters but without apparent purpose or plot. There is mention of a revolution, of scandalous revelations of the church and the medical profession plus a supremely dysfunctional, "man-made" family. Yet as the play continues to meander, one begins to get the uneasy feeling of watching the inmates of some fearfully scatological asylum.

Not that Frankenstein in Love is without reward. Barker's marvelously macabre sense of humor abounds. Credit must also be given to director Gutzman and his talented cast whose earnestness suggested an understanding of the various and sundry goings-on that seemed to elude many of us in the audience. Plus, the Brumder basement makes for an appealing theatre space, certainly a most appropriate setting for Frankenstein in Love.

Still, the play's the thing, as they say, and sadly Frankenstein in Love ultimately proves merely bewildering.

Couples ... And Then Some!

Now that the City of Milwaukee has a Domestic Partners Registry, people here are celebrating their togetherness as never before. These three books take a look at being together—no matter who you are. One takes a look at long-term relationships between gay and lesbian couples and how they managed to stay committed for the long haul. Another, by the same author, is a couples guide for gay men. The third contains interviews with bisexual women who tell of their relationships: some with women, some with men, some with both, and some who are single.

The Male Couple's Guide

By Eric Marcus

The author says, "Finding a man is never easy — there are hundreds of issues to be addressed including how to find the appropriate partner, how to communicate effectively, and how to build a meaningful connection" Originally published in 1988, this book was the first to address relationship questions for gay men with compassion, common sense, and humor.

In this newly updated version, the author provides male couples with the definitive relationship handbook for the 21st century. ... It is also a useful resource for straight family and friends who would like to know more about male relationships but are afraid to ask.

Some of the subjects discussed are: Knowing what to look for and where to look; Effective communication: how to discuss touchy issues early on and how to talk openly about larger problems; Coming out to your family and meeting your partner's family; Monogamy/Non-Monogamy: deciding what works best in your relationship; Typing the Knot: (everything from planning a ceremony to exchanging vows and rings); The Law: protecting and legalizing your relationship and getting insurance"; and many more valuable topics.

This guide, now in paperback and in its third edition, will help readers handle the challenges of their relationships and guide them down the road of self-discovery, honesty and love. (HarperPerennial, ISBN: 0-06-095275-x, US $17 Pb).

Bi Lives: Bisexual Women Tell Their Stories

By Kata Orndorff

This book contains 18 in-depth, revealing interviews with bisexual women. Some are in relationships with women, some with men, some with both, and some are single. The women range in age from 21 to 57 and are of different classes and races, with very different life experiences.

The author says she chose to do a book of interviews with bisexual women because "our lives do not conform to the stereotypes that gay and straight people have about bisexuals." For instance, many lesbians think that bisexual women are not serious about any relationship they would have with a woman because (they believe) bisexual women would place more importance on any relationship with a man.

Many bisexual women choose to be in monogamous relationships knowing that their partner could be of either sex. Others are not, specifically in order to be in simultaneous relationships with both a man and a woman. Others are open to whoever comes along.

Because of these facts, the author has addressed the issue of safer sex because she thinks it is important. She says while HIV is the scariest sexually transmitted disease to ever come along, there are other STDs with serious consequences such as hepatitis B and C, which can attack the liver, and herpes, which can be extremely painful and has no cure. The Safer Sex Guide is compiled by Rowan

Frost. Also included is a Resource List for Bisexual Women, compiled by Robin Ochs. (See Sharp Press, ISBN: 1-884365-09-4, $14.95 Pb).

Together Forever

By Eric Marcus

The author traveled across the United States and spoke with forty deeply committed, happy gay and lesbian couples who have been together between nine and fifty years. Marcus takes us on a journey from the high desert of Southern California to the cliffs of northern New Jersey and into the lives of the remarkable people he met.

People like Marjorie and Marian, Vermont dairy farmers who have been together for twenty years and run a successful cheese-making business; Stewart and Stanley, two nice middle-aged men from Queens who are dedicated to each other and to their work in the gay community; Jim and Martin who met at beauty school in Detroit in 1946; and Ruth and Zenobia, who met in jail (where they worked as correction officers), were friends for fourteen years and then fell in love.

These and other couples share their secrets for lasting happiness and create a realistic portrait of successful gay and lesbian marriage. "Among the many questions that are answered in this book are: How did the couples meet? How have they overcome their differences and survived the rough spots? What kind of relationships have they forged with their families, children, neighbors and colleagues? Are there any real secrets to having a happy relationship?"

Eric Marcus's book lays waste to the myth promoted by conservative critics and the religious right that gay and lesbian people are doomed to lives of instability and misery. Quite to the contrary, "Together Forever" offers a compelling and inspiring message of love and commitment from people who have found happiness against considerable odds." (Anchor Books, ISBN: 0-385-48876-9, US $14.95, Can $22.95 Pb).

Keepin' In Step

Have you ever met someone you instantly liked? You just knew there would be more than just a passing. It would actually turn into a friendship. As you remember from the last column, I was in Texas for a class. This is where I met Pamela. I talked just a bit about her about her teaching skills and that I thought she was pretty cool. Since then we have become e-mail buddies. Before you get any funny ideas, remember that I am gay and although Pamela is attractive, intelligent and has a great sense of humor, this is not a case of a student having a little crush on his teacher.

Pamela is originally from southeastern Wisconsin so right away we had something in common. Not only that, but I know Austin pretty well so that was another common area of interest. The first time I spoke with her was on the phone and right away I had a feeling that she was gonna be someone I would like. The first day of class was the first time I actually met her. I have to tell you that the picture in the training brochure gave me a different impression of how she would be. Not that it was a bad impression, just different from what I thought she would be like. I guess I would have pegged her with a kind of stuffy personality. I couldn't have been more wrong. She is kind of a neo-classic kind of chic. Monday through Friday dressed in business attire. Friday she came in with black jeans, a nice top and a pair of boots. Very classy Texas with a bit of flair added for fun. Anyway, we got along pretty well throughout the duration of the class. As I said in the last column, I kept leaving funny little messages all over the place for her. I'm not sure if she knew who they were coming from in the beginning of the week, but towards the end, I'm sure she knew. She also knew that I am "friends of Dorothy" as well. That became classroom knowledge I'm guessing Wednesday or Thursday when we were all talking about fun clubs to go to in Austin. Well you know me. I'm not shy about being gay no matter who the audience is. One of my classmates said, (not in these exact words) Ick, your gay? Of course my response was "Yeah, you gotta problem with that?" The guy didn't say much after that but he also didn't shut me out either so...

Anyway, Pamela and I e-mail just about every day. It looks like she will be visiting her for Thanksgiving so watch out Milwaukee, We're gonna take Pamela out to all of our favorite clubs. Maybe M&M for a little dinner before heading over to Fluid for a martini? We gotta hit Triangle as well. She's gotta meet Josh the straight bartender and Lana with whom we've become pretty good friends with. Then we're gonna hit switch to see if Pamela can sing. You know, Thursday night Karoke. Or if it's a Wednesday, over to Club 219 for the male strippers. No, we won't forget La Cage, she's gotta see Milwaukee's biggest dance club ... Oh, I know ... We'll take her to Dish ... Maybe there's something about her I didn't discover????

OK, enough about that, I need to get you caught up on the latest events. Club 219 celebrated their 1st year anniversary Chucky B. style. There was plenty of food down in the lower bar. If any of you didn't know this, Chuck is a great cook. His vittles are some of the best in town. Did I mention he has the biggest meatballs in town? There was also an hour that you didn't have to pay for cocktails. That's right, all the cocktails were on the house. Just as I was finishing my first cocktail, I heard Kimberly Anne introducing the first of three strippers that "wink wink" took most of their cloths off "wink wink." Hats off to 219 for a fabulous party and a very successful year of new ownership.

Owner of Dish, Julia, has started yet another venture. Remember the old Mama Roux? It looks like the deal is done and Julia will re-open the club as a gay/straight place for people to meet, enjoy good conversation. You just know that if Julia is opening another club that it will be a classy, new fun place with great music to hang out. By the way, see the staff at Dish and ask them how you can get your very own Musique VIP pass or visit their web site at www.ugroove.net.

While I was waiting for film to be processed I stopped in at the Ball Game to see who was there and as usual, Weasy was there in all her glory talkin' about a place called heaven & hell. Actually, he was trying to say Holy Hill but it was late in the afternoon ... He kept a group of us laughing until he had to catch a ride to another party elsewhere. Thanks Weasy, we had a blast picking on you!

The Domestic Partnership Registry Reception at City Hall was a total, wonderful success. There were hundreds of people there, participating if not registering in this very historical moment in Wisconsin history. Erv and Ross from the BESTD Clinic were the first to be recognized at the reception. It was truly a moving moment when the crowd went nuts when they took the "stage" and were presented with their certificate. Kudos to the many people (a list too long to mention) who fought for this registry and the people who put the reception together.

This Labor Day weekend was lots of fun. We hit our typical clubs and had a blast including a party with Si, owner of Boot Camp. The other event was the AIDS Walk fund-raiser at 1100 Club. I'm tellin ya, the shows at 1100 Club have more camp than any other show in Wisconsin. Some of the performers take their performances seriously and put on a great show. The others are just in it for fun, which also rubs off on the crowd. Grandma was there wearing a very colorful pair of overalls that looked pretty funky in the black light. Lot's of cash was raised and I couldn't have had a better time.

That's about it for this issue. Oh, I almost forgot to mention. Check out Triangle's new paint job, the exterior has a fresh new look to it. I hope to see all of you at Wisconsin AIDS Walk, the fight is far from over. Have fun and as always, slower traffic keep right. ▼

AIDS WALK WISCONSIN

September 12

"I have been fortunate enough that as of this moment I have not lost a friend. I am able to walk and will continue to do what I can to help find a cure for HIV. We each have a role to play while we are here, mine is to help fight this disease as best as I can. Thank you for walking with me! See you there, I'll be the one in sneakers! i)"

Jeanne,
Fond du Lac

" This will be my second Walk. I walk (and cry and smile) in memory of Donald-David. He was my friend, my mentor, and now he's my angel. I miss him more than my heart can bear... so I will walk until the pandemic is over. When you love someone, you tell them, right then... or the moment just passes you by. Hold a hand, hug a friend, lend an ear - and keep on walking. See YOU in September!"

Kristina, Oak Creek

" If I lose another friend I'll lose my mind!"

Jim, Eau Claire

" William,
my brother, my friend.
I miss you, I love you."

Bobbi, Milwaukee

WHY WILL YOU WALK?

"I have hoped, prayed and cried more than anyone will ever know. The new drugs aren't working for my friend anymore, so this year's Walk may be his last. I am walking and still hoping for a cure."

Steve, Milwaukee

" Last night, I found out my friend Jason is HIV positive. I never thought I'd know someone who was positive. I never imagined it would hit so close to home. I will be walking this year for the first time. I'm doing it for the strength and courage Jason has shown me in his daily living. I'm doing it for myself. I'm doing it so others won't get this disease."

Thom, Beloit
