Back issues of Playgirl. Also a great collection of hardbacks concerning various aspects of our lives: "Male Couple's Guide to Living Together," "The Last Closet" etc. List? Walt, #821, 304 N. Adams St., Green Bay, WI 54301 living outside the "scene." In Chapter 5 he studies the deurbanization of homosexuality. He has some remarkable insights in Chapter 6 in terms of "Post-modern Monogamy." In his introduction, Signorile states "Both in the urban centers and beyond - but again, perhaps more prominently outside the cities - there is today more nonsexual mixing and socializing between gay men of all ages, outside of the traditional meeting places such as bars and clubs, and many older men are assuming roles as mentors to younger men. The barriers between the generations are breaking down, helping put to rest some of the most enduring myths about older gay men."

"Chapter 7 focuses on the stereotype of the 'lonely old queen,' and how this stereotype continues to plague those caught up in the scene, fearful of aging and of losing their looks and their self-worth. Calling for the death of the stereotype of the lonely old queen, Chapter 7 shows the gay men who are shedding the ugly stereotype for themselves and for the generations that follow them. Their lives will inspire us all." He ends the book with "Six ways to deprogram from the cult:"

1. SHAKE UP THE CULT meaning be aware of the cult of masculinity's power and how to loosen it's grip on homosexual men.

2. EXPLORE INTIMACY in which he promotes deprogramming by facing the fear of intimacy head-on and actually achieving intimacy.

3. MENTOR AND GET INVOLVED suggesting expanding one's life to grow and move beyond the cult and seeing the same thing happen to others in generations before and after ourselves.

4. TAKE CHARGE OF SAFER SEX by taking charge of your life, including decisions about safer sex.

5. DEMAND REAL HARM REDUCTION talking about educating people about the various drugs and their dangers.

6. GET BEYOND THE URBAN GAY SCENE meaning that deprogramming means taking control of our lives and not allowing the cult of masculinity to define for us, and for everyone else, what it means to be gay and what it means to be a man.

Signorile's LIFE OUTSIDE is the most insightful journey I have ever read about the experience of being gay in America. In this book he brings together the opinions of many experts both gay and lesbian, thereby, enabling the reader to achieve the broad perspective and deep understandings of gay and lesbian writers. If you choose to read only one book about the gay male experience, this would be that book. It would enlighten you and could indeed change the course of your life as a gay male. This indeed is a book to buy and read and pass on to as many friends as you possibly can.

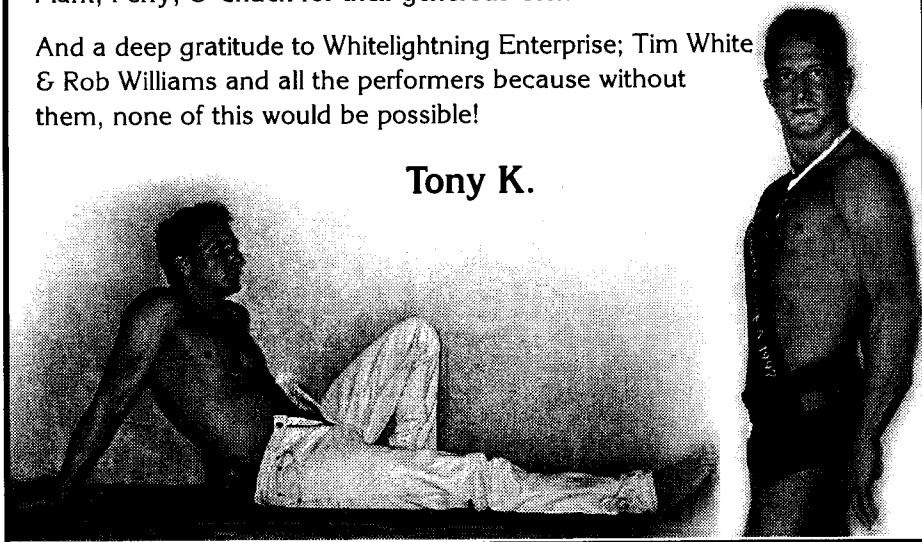

A Great Big Thanks to all of you for all your support in my quest for Mr. Gay USA. Special thanks go to my sponsors:

Life Outside

The Signorile Report on Gay Men: Sex, Drugs, Muscles, and the Passages of Life

By: Michaelangelo Signorile
 Harper Collins Publishers/New York
 1997/Hardcover 315 pages/$25.00
 (Available at Afterwords Bookstore, Milwaukee.)

Anyone who has read Michaelangelo Signorile's columns "On hot™ button political issues" in Out Week (now defunct) and now in Out, have come to enjoy a man who has strong convictions about men being gay and all of the issues that we face in truly being ourselves. In his newest book, he presents some most disturbing insights of how much of the urban gay subculture has been deeply programmed in what he calls the "cult of masculinity." He describes it as obsessional thinking with many compulsive aspects in terms of behaviors. He basically describes the dynamic as brain-washing into valuing hyper-masculinity or super-masculinity and defining it as "straight-acting and straight appearing". The author states "every major American city in fact has one (a local gay publication) - and sometimes three or four - 'bar rags' filled with images of 'perfect' gay men, the ideals that set the standard. Most of the pictures are being used to sell us something: gym memberships to the trendy gyms of choice; all-night parties at night-clubs filled with near-naked, young-and-buff men; phone sex; and even actual sex in the guise of 'escorts'. These same images are played back to us again and again in gay porn, on safer sex posters, and in dozens of gay newspapers and several glossy national magazines that often sport pumped-up coverboys and fetching ads selling products and events, from underwear to hot parties." He also says that the gay porn industry, centered on the West Coast, helped define the ideal further as "the corn-fed, youthful, hairless, white, muscled man-boy with a healthy California tan". The author concludes that the term "straight-acting", a term to signify masculinity, became more popular than ever in the personals of gay publications and throughout gay cyberspace and has seemingly been accepted by much of the gay community. This he points out is the essence of homophobia and internalized self-hatred.

Charles Isherwood, the author of Wonder Bread and Ecstasy:

The Life and Death of Joey Stefano published in 1996, made it very clear on page 60 that many gay men find straight men more attractive than men who are perceptibly gay. The author states "gay men began to fetishize (in the 1980's) straight men in their video pornography to an unprecedented degree." He quotes Dave Kinnick, Advocate Men's Adult-film Review and Reporter from 1988 to 1994, "It was believed that the only people capable of being stars were those guys who were promoted as being straight; the mainstay of gay porn since day one had been the supposedly straight men fucking gay guys."

In terms of Signorile's book, he then exposes how many urban gay men are pumping up with steroids both legally and black market. He explains the use of steroids by the following opinion, "The obsession with fitting the hyper-masculine paradigm, predictably, has much to do with internalized homophobia. On a simple level there's the fear of not living up to expected ideas about masculinity and the fear of being marked as the effeminate homosexual, someone who is less than a 'real man,' something that perhaps has as much to do with misogyny as it does homophobia. Also, in childhood many gay men realized that they do not quite fit in with the other boys and men. That difference, whether they were effeminate or not, often keeps them excluded from the typical kind of macho, heterosexual teenage camaraderie and bonding - as a result, they were not allowed in the 'in' crowd of boys. Many of us never quite heal from such exclusion, which is often bitter and painful. Once out in the gay world, we often become obsessed with never being excluded again by the popular crowd. Many of us carry this obsession to extremes. For many young gay men today, that obsession leads them to ingest or inject themselves with powerful and dangerous steroids, a trend that appears to have begun slowly in the 1980's and taken off within the past few years."

All of the above he describes as "Life Inside," hence, the reason for the title of the book "Life Outside" in which he makes a case for gay men

DANCE TO DISCO

by William A. Poppo, Club Xpress

What ever happened to Disco? Disco is dead. Disco Sucks! We've heard it all; and I guess it's one of the best known secrets that Disco never died. It has evolved over time (and really...not very much).

We can thank Gloria Gaynor, Donna Summer, Giorgio Moroder and The Village People for getting us started in the mid-seventies. I was wearing "Angel Flight" Polyester bell bottoms and those awful shiny shirts with the big collars. Don't forget the platform shoes. I think that's why gay men dance so well today - we learned on platform shoes, sometimes four to five inches off the dance floor. Well, I digress.

I can't even tell you when the Rock Revolution tried to kill Disco, because I never saw it happen. I was in Boston and NYC. We were still dancing to the Disco beat, except now we were calling it House and Hi-NRG. The Weather Girls were singing "It's Raining Men." We were all screaming with ecstasy. The Sound of Dance Music didn't change again until around 1990. Yes. Techno was born.

We were never into Techno much in NYC. I squealed over two Unlimited's "Twilight Zone." But, the Lords of Acid weren't vanilla enough and a little too hard for us older queens (not in our 20s). We adapted quite well to Trance, however. It seemed more amiable. The evolution hadn't stopped yet. Tribal music beat its way to the dance floors. Soon everyone was Raving! This was a new thing. Well, new for most of America. Some of us had been doing it for quite some time. We were doing the same thing to Disco.

Brian and I were at Java's a few weeks ago. We had a wonderful time and a good talk with Za. Mark said I should do an extended playlist. I jumped at the chance. So, I thought I'd do my favorite Dance songs of all time. Za said 20...I found 40...so I'll do a top 25. There's a fine line between passion and obsession - and I just tripped over it. No, not tripped, more like CARTWHEELED!

The list I ended up with was hardly what I expected. I guess I was moved by artists and songs that seemed to change the face of music. Gay clubs are the frontrunners to dance music. We make or break many artists. I was there at the Saint in NYC when Irene Cara was dragged off the stage, kicking and screaming because she thought she could tell us what we going to hear, not what we expected. Have you heard from her lately?

We've lived through Disco, and Techno and maybe we'll make it beyond Goth (do you think?). The following are my favorites. Take a spin with me and see if you agree.

1. Sunscreen....."Exodus" (95)
2. Ascension....."Someone" (97)
3. Mari Kiani....."I Imagine" (95)
4. D:Ream....."Things Can Only Get Better" (93)
5. Pet Shop Boys....."Left To My Own Devices" (88)
6. Donna Summer....."I Feel Love" (75)
7. Quartzlock....."Love Eviction" (88)
8. Dajavu....."Don't Speak" (97)
9. Sunscreen....."Perfect Motion/Walkon" (93)
10. Abba....."Lay All Your Love On Me" (80)
11. Soft Cell....."Tainted Love" (81)
12. Hit List....."Into The Fire" (85)
13. Sunscreen....."Catch" (97)
14. Billie Ray Martin....."Your Loving Arms" (94)
15. SalSoul Orchestra....."Magic Bird Of Fire" (77)
16. Alphaville....."Forever Young" (84)
17. Rozalla....."Are You Ready To Fly" (92)
18. Cerrone....."Trippin' On The Moon" (83)
19. Gat Decor....."Passion" (92)
20. Bjork....."Big Time Sensuality" (93)

PAST/OUT

BY DAVID BIANCO

September 4, 1957 (40 years ago this week): The Wolfenden Report is released in Great Britain, advocating a more liberal legal stance towards homosexuality.

What was the Wolfenden Report?

Before the modern gay-rights movement, the three traditional ways of understanding homosexuality were as sin, sickness, or crime. This fall marks the 40th anniversary of a key step in undermining the "crime" approach, with the release of the Wolfenden Report in Great Britain.

In the early 1950s, British headlines were filled with scandals relating to homosexuality. Several noted public figures, including a prominent politician, a famous actor, and a respected journalist, were arrested and tried for homosexual offenses. These scandals led to increasing public discussion, and for the first time in British history legal issues relating to homosexuality were openly debated in the House of Lords. The British government decided to appoint a commission to explore legal issues relating to homosexuality and prostitution. To chair the commission, the government tapped Sir John Wolfenden, the vice-chancellor of Reading University. One of Wolfenden's qualifications was his admission that he knew nothing of the subject at hand - and therefore could be an impartial leader of the inquiry.

Although the Wolfenden Committee also addressed prostitution (and ultimately advocated harsher penalties for street prostitutes), from the start the focus of the Committee and the public debate surrounding their report was on male homosexuality. The committee (which included politicians, ministers, aristocrats and a judge) met more than 60 times, taking testimony from 200 witnesses before issuing its report on September 4, 1957.

The report's conclusions depended on its assumption that the law exists to preserve public order and decency and to protect the weak (and especially children) from exploitation. The Wolfenden Committee said it did not feel that the law should "concern itself with what a man does in private unless it can be shown to be so contrary to the public good that the law ought to intervene in its function as the guardian of the public good."

The report then examined the three common objections to reforming laws that would criminalize any male-male sexual act: that such an act "menaces the health of society"; that "it has damaging effects on family life"; and that "a man who indulges in these practices with another man may turn his attention to boys."

One by one the report debunked these objectives. It asserted that there was no evidence to support the view that homosexuality causes the decay of civilizations. It pointed out that "adultery, fornication, and lesbian behavior" are equally threatening to family life and yet were not criminalized. Finally, it suggested that law reform would actually serve to protect minors, as some men who would prefer adult partners may instead have been turning to boys because they felt safer from the threat of blackmail or prosecution.

The Wolfenden Report explicitly outlined a program for the reform of laws that criminalized male homosexual acts. It advocated legalizing consensual sex between adult males (defined as those older than 21), loosening penalties for sex with those under 21, and shortening the statute of limitations for homosexual acts between adults and those under 21 to one year.

Many British gays and lesbians were disappointed at the focus on 21 as the legal age, since lesbian and heterosexual acts were legal at age 16. Nonetheless, they welcomed the report and the promise of greater sexual freedom.

Most of Britain's newspapers also treated the release of the Wolfenden Report favorably, but a public opinion poll showed 47 percent of the public opposed to the report's conclusions, with only 38 percent supporting law reform. Nonetheless, the Wolfenden Report sparked a debate both within legal circles and the wider society about homosexuality and crime in general that ultimately brought about sweeping change.

Some of these changes showed up quite soon after the report's release. For example, in the late 1950s, the British government lifted its ban on theatrical and cinematic portrayals of homosexuality. The plays and films that followed furthered the dissemination of liberal ideas about gays and lesbians.

The Wolfenden report had repercussions in North America as well, as it was frequently cited by homophile and later gay-liberation organizations as evidence that a civilized society doesn't criminalize gay sex.

In Britain itself, though, the Wolfenden Report carried no force of law, and the ultimate reform of the anti-gay laws it addressed would take a full decade. In the 10 years between the release of the report and the Sexual Offences Act of 1967, gay and lesbian activists and their heterosexual allies campaigned in all sectors of society for more acceptance of homosexuality. Indeed, public opinion had shifted markedly by 1967 when Parliament voted to decriminalize private adult homosexual acts in England and Wales (Scottish and Northern Irish gay men still faced criminal sanctions into the 1980s).

The age of consent for gay male sex remained 21 until 1984, when it was lowered to 18. Currently, Britain is under pressure from the European Commission to lower the age to 16, and Labor Prime Minister Tony Blair recently signalled his intention to allow a free vote on the matter in the House of Commons.

want to have a softball team and some dart teams. We want to get very active in the community—we want to lots of things outside of the bar atmosphere. Most important, we want Woody's to be a friendly bar. We want it to be like the old YP's in Milwaukee.

JL: You want to give people another reason to come out to the bars.

RA: Oh, we just want to have a place for people to come out and have fun. We'd be open to organizations [to do shows] because we have the room for that. We may put on some shows for fund raisers...we don't want to have drag shows on a regular basis, but we will do special events.

JL: Do you have a proposed opening date?

RA: We are tentatively looking to open November 1st at the earliest, November fifteenth at the latest.

JL: Can we expect a lot of ads so we know when we can stop in?

RA: Definitely—we'll be doing a lot of advertising!

The conversation then turned to his personal life with his boyfriend.

RA: Kevin and I have been together since Mother's Day of '95. We're moving into a new apartment together—we've lived together before, but this is a new place that's just ours.

JL: Things are now a little more official?

RA: You could say that, yes!

JL: How did the two of you meet?

RA: We met at a Walker's Point Cafe. I was with my ex—the man I was with before Kevin—and it was pretty rocky. I remember seeing [Kevin] a couple of times at the cafe, but being in a relationship I never wanted to approach him or anything. Brock [the ex] and I broke up and I went out looking for Kevin because I wanted to meet him. It took me a month! The day Brock moved out of the house and everything was finalized, that night I ended up running into him. I asked him if he would meet me after work and he did...we set up a date for Mother's Day. From then on, it's history...

JL: Is Kevin going to be involved in the business at all?

RA: He's a personal banker a credit union, and he's in school for his accounting degree, so we're gonna have him involved in some of the accounting aspects of the business. He plans on doing the payroll and a few other things.

JL: You seem to be a lot younger than most people who strike out on their own in business, particularly in the business you chose.

RA: Well, I guess I have two things I could say about that: That was a goal of mine—and I am pretty goal-oriented. If I set my mind to something, I like to get it done. Plus, I got an early start. My parents were divorced when I was fifteen. My mother took off for Chicago and left my father and I with a huge debt. My father had just taken an early retirement, so we didn't have a lot of money. My father and I moved in with his girlfriend, but since I was my mother's son, [the girlfriend] asked me to leave. So, I went back to the house my parent's owned while I was in school. The gas was shut off, the electric was shut off—there wasn't any money. It was pretty hard, and I ended up dropping out of high school. I've been working it on my own ever since, making mortgage payments since I was sixteen. I've been working eighty hours for almost two years doing construction and roofing, fencing—stuff like that.

JL: The whole experience made you grow up an take charge of things early on.

RA: Yeah, but I was pretty well prepared for it. I was very independent growing up, and my parents never set any rules for me because they could trust me. I was always good—I stayed in school, did what I had to do—I was very responsible, very dedicated. Like I've said, I've had a very good upbringing as far as being told, "You're good." "You're smart." "You can do anything you want." That came in very handy when times became tough.

JL: Do you still have the house?

RA: Actually, we just moved out. I put the house back in my father's name, and he plans on selling it and moving into an apartment. We'll split it [the proceeds from the sale] I put a lot of equity into it in the last couple of years.

JL: That's cool! Do you think there's a moral here? A lot of gay and lesbian teens may find themselves out on their own...is there a message in this?

RA: I think there's two things that are important: When you do have kids, treat them right and take care of them. Instill in them the values and ideals you want them to have and that will help them be successful. I honestly believe if I didn't have that growing up, [my life] would have been a totally different story.

Second: If you are put into that situation as a teen, stick to your morals, y'know? Make something of your life—you've got your whole life ahead of you. You can do whatever you want. There are a lot of programs out there to help you do it.

Ray was a great person to talk to, but in my opinion he is actually a better person to emulate. Besides talking a great game, he has shown he can deliver, an important skill anyone should learn. There are a lot of up-and-coming gay and lesbian young adults who will have to make their way in the world, and by following the example of this one gentlemen they could hardly do better.

Good luck to Ray and all of those involved with Woody's!

Jess Littleman with Ray Arce

I was, to say the least, a little surprised when my editor Mark asked me to interview a young man who is starting up a new gay bar. Besides running Quest, Mark is also Za, the owner of the Green Bay bar of the same name. Had our saucy Italian finally spun one record too many?

The details were sketchy—his name was Ray Arce, a twenty-two year old living in Milwaukee. He was fairly well-known to patrons of the bars he had worked at over the past couple of years, and now he planned on opening his own club in the downtown Milwaukee area.

For Za to ask me to interview potential competition, I have to admit my interest was piqued. As I soon found out, the opening of a gay bar was just the tip of the proverbial iceberg in this man's life.

Jess Littleman: Where did you go to high school?

Ray Arce: Solomon School of Business (in Milwaukee).

JL: What was it like?

RA: Oh, it was pretty good, actually. The school I went to was a business specialty school, so I took a lot of classes like Entrepreneurship, Business Planning, Accounting, Business Management...

JL: How did you decide that this is what you wanted to do with your life?

RA: I don't know. Growing up, I was told by my family that I was going to make something of myself, and that I had great potential. So I guess I just kind of followed through with it.

JL: Is entrepreneurship a common trait in your family?

RA: No, not at all. My mother is a career waitress and my father worked for the factory. I looked towards that and thought I didn't want to do that for the rest of my life.

JL: What type of things have you done for work?

RA: I've done a lot—it's a long list! (Laughs)

Geez, in fifth grade, I worked as a pin setter at an old bar and bowling alley called the Howard House. I had to put [the pins] in a machine and then work the machine to put them in place exactly. I ended up with a couple of cracked ribs and a concussion!

I was [also] a promoter for a wrestling organization...called the WOW—or Wisconsin Organized Wrestling. It was owned by a local comedian, Dobie Maxwell. We're good friends, he was a friend of the family.

JL: What made you decide to open up your own club?

RA: It was actually a goal of mine, even before I came out. I started working at the restaurant

Walker's Point Cafe, and it was my foot in the door. I wanted to open bar, but first I wanted some bartending experience. I got known there, and when the owner wanted to open In Between, I went there. When the owner left, I went to Triangle. I also started working at The Water St. Docks, [another bar in Milwaukee]. It's kind of a leather club....

JL: ...a five-oh-one and t-shirt thang?

RA: Exactly!

JL: That I understand! So now you're opening up your own place.

RA: It's in the place where Three B's is in now—the corner of Second and Lapalm. It's gonna be called Woody's. It's a nice building.

JL: Did you pick this location, or did someone approach you?

RA: A little bit of both. I had the word out to a few select people that I was looking for a place, and I was told [the owners of Three B's] were looking to get out of it. So we [my partner Steve Behl] investigated it and made an offer. They accepted. I met my business partner Steve when I was bartending—he was a customer. He was also on my softball team. He's an accountant.

JL: What's Woody's going to be like when you're open for business?

RA: It's going to be a Men's Bar. It's gonna have a small dance floor, a front bar and a back bar. It's going to have a pool table, dart machines and games—we want to sponsor a lot of teams! We Milwaukee and act on it" says Progressive Milwaukee Co-Chair Stephanie Walters.

This year's Community Activist Award Winners are:

- The Living Wage Four: County Supervisors Beth Coggs-Jones, Penny Podell, Roger Quindel and James White; each played a critical role in the passage of the Living Wage Resolution at the Milwaukee County Board.

- Paulette Copeland is the newly elected President of the Milwaukee Teacher Education Association. We are recognizing her commitment to improving the quality of public education for Milwaukee's children.

- The Milwaukee LGBT Community Center Organization Effort is recognized for bringing together the members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community, in an organizing vision that embraces self-empowerment, economic development and activism.

- The Service Employee International Union, Local 150, Dignity Campaign will also be recognized. While Wisconsin Works (W-2) continues to plunge women further into hopelessness, SEIU 150 attacks poverty through its campaign to organize health care industry workers. In the process, they effectively challenge the economic policies of the state.

- The Honorary Tommy Thompson Enemy of the People Award: Mark Belling, for his right wing, wrong headed, loud mouth musings.

The Next Generation Youth Community Choir will provide entertainment this year. Tickets for the banquet are $25.

PrideFest's Michael Hall "Promoted"

PrideFest co-director Michael Hall has been appointed as one of the International Association of Lesbian/Gay Pride Coordinators (IALGPC), Region Four directors, which includes members of Pride Committees from throughout the world.

The region includes Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, North & South Dakota and Ohio.

"This position is very important for Wisconsin," says Hall, "With the facilities that we have (Henry W. Maier Festival Grounds), we can promote Wisconsin with something that no other Pride organization has."

In related 'Pride' news, Hall is working with the Greater Milwaukee Convention and Visitors Bureau in a quest to bring the IALGPC convention here in the year 2000. (He will keep us posted!)

LEATHER/FETISH

by Papa Joe

Happiness to all, and a special wish for happiness to Don and Warren who will pledge themselves to each other in a 2 PM ceremony Sat., 13 Sept. The happy couple after a brief honeymoon in some back water Arkansas town, will receive in St. Louis, Mo, on the 19th.

Proving that a 7 day honeymoon would make a whole week. I know, it's old.

The weather didn't cooperate with the SWS Docks Carnival for the AIDS Walk, but with the help of the "friendly staff" we did have fun. The Castaways club nite later that evening also raised money for the AIDS Walk. Just a reminder The Walk is Sunday, Sept. 21; give till it hurts.

As a follow up on my preaching about abusive relationships:

>From Daddy Mack/(high priced NY Psychoanalyst - speciality, kinky, Great Lake Harley Rider and Daddy to Harley boy)

Yo Papa Joe,

Your take on leaving emotionally abusive relationships seems right on target to me. Your advice is sound; unfortunately, relationships can be addictive and to leave them may seem logically correct to do, but I find that some people, especially us Gay Men (and Women, too!) are often powerless to do so until much hurt, and we're the ones that end up waiting for the "2x4" to hit us with a grand wake-up call.

Instead of waiting, I advocate "nipping it off at the bud"; i.e., learning to heed to warning signs before we get involved. For example, 1) he avoids talking about his past and he dodges direct question; he could be hiding something serious and probably wouldn't want to work on a relationship; 2) he dislikes talking about feelings, switching subjects and trying to keep things light; he won't let you in and is probably afraid to get really close; 3) frequent use of alcohol or other drugs: he's an addict even though he'll deny it so expect mood swings and 4) he acts cool, aloof, always together, never showing his vulnerable side: he's emotionally unavailable and you'll never relax and feel safe.

Of course, if you want a 24/7 slave situation, forget the above: the more emotionally abusive for you, the better, but you can still "play" and wake up to reality with that chosen mate as an equal.

Hey Daddy Mack:

Again, the hair on my arms, back and neck stood up and quivered - I had forgotten about the addictive part and it did take a 2 X 4 for my wake up call.

Love to you and Harley boy. And...

Don is a neat person and has been around for awhile. I mean that in the nicest possible way, not that he is old or anything, I mean he is younger than me - I think - then someone told me God is also. It is just that he has lots of experience and not a young novice. (someone bail me out here)

And now for da upcumming events.

Firebirds Sat Sept. 6, Bar night at The Boot Camp - Starts at 10 PM raffle tickets for sale and drawings for prizes at begins at midnight.

We have two new pledges and are seriously looking at more than a dinner for our anniversary next spring.

Last weekend, we went to Chi town to the Rodeo Rider's August club night at Touche. The next night it was the Nimbus Club night. Also, on Saturday there was a cookout sponsored by Touche' and Numbers (bar next door). All in all a great weekend, great fun and the food was excellent.

Also leaving on Thurs., 18 Sept for San Francisco. Doing the 10 days before the Folsum St. Fair (Sun/28), taking in all the parties and the Drummer Contest (Sat/27).

Our run will feature both a day trip to the MN Renaissance Festival and at night, 4 play parties. Good seeing you at the Argonauts/ Castaways run.

Chris/Atons

While on the subject of Argonauts/Castaways "North Woods run"

Unicorns--Just wanted to let you know that as a newcomer to the scene, the Castaways - Argonauts Run was the first run I've attended other than my own Unicorn run.

I'd like to thank both the Castaways and Argonauts for their energy, planning, and skill in creating a great weekend event. The facilities all served as great venues for the hilarious shows, Mr. Northwoods Contest, and the terrific on-site prepared meals.

Most importantly was the opportunity to meet and join in the camaraderie of 100+ men from Boston, Florida, and the midwest in a supportive and friendly environment. I had been under the impression that only club members could attend these runs. I would urge others who are not in a club to take the opportunity to participate in runs such as these.

Again, kudos to the two clubs - they showed what hospitality and commitment to our community really are.

Gus/Unicorns

Gus:

You're so right - These events allow the novice to meet persons of ilk in a milieu that has none of the trappings of a bar and with first timer you have to be impressed with the comradery, love and communion of this close and caring family. Be true to yourself and caring of others and you will be

Progressive Milwaukee Announces Winners of 4th Annual Awards Banquet

The best in community activism are being honored at Progressive Milwaukee's Fourth Annual Awards Banquet. The event will be held Saturday, Sept. 27, at the UW-Milwaukee Student Union in the Wisconsin Room, at 6 p.m. "We are celebrating the endurance and perseverance of communities and individuals that hold out hope for a welcome part of that family for life.

This is why runs can be almost addicting. There are just too many friends that you will miss if you don't go.

In this case, the food is an added attraction/ addiction, Dos guys know how to cook.

In spite of head colds, Lee and I made it up for Saturday afternoon, (just after the wedding) and evening leaving before the Mr. Northwoods contest. I am holding on to the wedding pictures for one more issue to see if I can raise more ransom money. Really, girlfriend, in a gold lame' dress???

The pictures I have of the Friday nite show with Kate Smith (aka Blanch) & company will be released with this issue. [editors note--due to the extended holiday, the pictures did not arrive in time for this issue.] The two Miss Patties were just too too darling. Dems just tits, Cortez. PJ
