VIOLENCE IN GAY AND LESBIAN DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIPS

By Claire M Renzetti, PH.D. and Charles Harvey Miley, PH.D., Editors, Harrington Park Press, An Imprint of The Haworth Press, Inc. New York 1996 121 pages paperback.

This book contributes to a growing literature on the causes, manifestations, consequences, and responses to violence in gay and lesbian domestic partnerships. Taken together, the 11 chapters in this book present a plethora of empirical facts about violence in same-sex partnerships, identify a range of factors that render violence within the confines of gay and lesbian partnerships predictably similar to domestic violence among heterosexual partners, as well as dramatically dissimilar from that which occurs among heterosexual partners; it critically examines the vast array of institutional and service sector responses that have been and continue to be used to control domestic violence among gays and lesbians. The book indicates that preliminary studies show that 22% to 46% of all lesbians have been in a physically violent same-sex relationship. The Gay and Lesbian Community Action Council in 1987 found that 22% of 900 lesbians surveyed in the Twin Cities area of Minnesota had been in a physically violent lesbian relationship. In the Gay and Lesbian Community Action Council survey, one of the few prevalence statistics on gay male violence, showed that of the 1,000 gay men surveyed, 17% reported having been in a physically violent gay relationship. The unique type of psychological abuse for gays and lesbians is the threat of "outing" to family, landlords, employers, or others. This "blackmail" potential for same sex abusers often isolates gay and lesbian victims to a greater extent than their heterosexual female counterparts. This book indicates that lesbians and gay men abuse their partners in the same manner heterosexual men abuse their partners. Abusers of any sexual orientation rape, beat, insult, and sometimes kill their victims. However, seeking help as a gay or lesbian victim is tantamount to "coming out" and a major life decision. The authors indicate that experts in the field of domestic violence estimate that violence in same-sex relationships occur at approximately the same rate as in heterosexual relationships. That is, about 1 in 5 men in an intimate relationship with another man will be battered. In terms of actual numbers, authors Island and Letellier in 1991 estimated approximately 500,000 gay men will be victims of partner violence each year.

The authors indicate that perpetrators of domestic violence report that they use physical violence against their partners because it is a highly effective means of control. Physical violence, however, is but one means of coercion and perpetrators may use whatever is available to them to dominate and control their partner. Most literature on batterers' coercive behavior is based on studies on heterosexual men, recent research on lesbian battering demonstrates that lesbian batterers, too, display a terrifying ingenuity in their selection of abusive tactics, frequently tailoring the abuse to the specific vulnerabilities of their partners. Abusive gay and bisexual men are likely to be equally ingenious in choosing their weapons of control, and HIV can be a very powerful weapon. Perhaps even more insidious is the perpetrator who deliberately infects his partner with HIV so as to keep the man from leaving. The perpetrator may reason that infecting makes his partner less desirable to others and make him more dependent on him and the relationship.

A major problem confronting gay and bi-sexual men is the inability or unwillingness of other people to accept their victimization as legitimate. From a variety of different and influential sources, these men often get the clear message that they are not "real" victims, despite the violence they experience. In other words, women are much more easily seen as victims than men are.

This book provides the reader with a thoughtful and enlightening analysis of factors unique to same-sex domestic violence. The issues raised challenge many assumptions and limitations inherent in traditional domestic violence theory and the battered women's movement.

PAST/OUT

BY DAVID BIANCO

December 30, 1977 (20 years ago this week): Toronto police raid the office of gay newspaper The Body Politic.

What was the The Body Politic raid?

On Friday, December 30, 1977, the staff of The Body Politic, at that time Canada's largest gay newspaper, got an unwelcome surprise. Waving a search warrant, five police officers arrived at the newspaper's Toronto office to hunt for evidence supporting a charge that The Body Politic (which was collectively operated) had violated Section 168 of the Canadian criminal code - "use of the mails for the purpose of transmitting or delivering anything that is obscene, indecent, immoral or scurrilous." The raid - along with ensuing brouhaha - marked a turning point in the maturation of Canada's lesbian and gay community.

The incident actually started a month earlier, when The Body Politic published its December-January issue. In it was an article by collective member Gerald Hannon, which was titled "Men Loving Boys Loving Men" and explored the controversial topic of man-boy love. Hannon argued that men who had sex with boys were not child molesters, as a homophobic society tended to view them, but responsible citizens performing an educational service for gay youth - liberating their sexuality. The real victims of molestation, rather, were all gays and lesbians. "Every homosexual's sexuality has been interfered with," Hannon wrote, "impeded, strangled, diverted, denounced, 'cured,' pitied, punished. That is molestation."

The Body Politic's staff was well aware that Hannon's take on the subject might cause an explosion of public outrage, both from outside and inside the lesbian and gay community. Consequently, the paper opted to run a preamble to the article, explaining that Hannon's piece had been typeset and laid out for nearly six months before the staff could agree to publish it. They had finally made the decision to run it because "the 'climate' will never be right... but the discussion must be opened up."

The political climate was, in fact, extremely volatile. The Ontario legislature was considering passage of a gay rights bill, and the issue was being hotly debated in the mainstream press. Opponents of the bill painted lesbians and gay men as child molesters, much as Anita Bryant and her followers had successfully done in their "Save Our Children" campaign in Dade County, Florida, earlier that year. In addition, a public furor had followed the August 1977 killing of a 12-year-old Toronto boy by four men, a crime that the tabloids sensationalized as a "homosexual orgy slaying." It was in this atmosphere that The Body Politic printed Hannon's article - which from their perspective was an attempt to set the record "straight" on child molestation.

Predictably, the attempt backfired.

The mainstream Toronto press had a field day with Hannon's article. In five separate editorials the week before Christmas, one of which was titled "Bawdy Politic," the Toronto Sun blasted the gay newspaper. One conservative columnist, who had often attacked the lesbian and gay community in print, personally lobbied the attorney general to take action against The Body Politic. On December 30, the day the Sun announced in a headline, "Crown to Study Sex Mag," police officers raided The Body Politic's office. More than three hours later, they carted off twelve boxes of manuscripts, correspondence, financial and advertising records, and subscription lists.

The week after the raid, the Canadian government brought criminal charges against the paper's nonprofit publisher, Pink Triangle Press, and three of its officers, one of whom was Hannon. Canada's lesbian and gay community was split in opinion about the case. There were those who believed that The Body Politic had provoked the raid by publishing the controversial article, while others were alarmed about the dangerous precedent set when police were able to seize a gay publication's records, particularly subscription lists. Many thought the charges had been trumped up in order to damage the chances of the gay rights ordinance.

It took a full year for the case to come to trial. By that time, much of the hostility against the paper had died down, largely because Toronto's new mayor, John Sewell, publicly supported The Body Politic and denounced all attempts at censorship of the press. In February 1979, the newspaper was acquitted of the charges. The publication promptly reprinted Hannon's article in its next edition, along with analysis by lesbian novelist Jane Rule and an assessment of the controversy by three staff members.

But the case wasn't over. The Canadian government appealed the decision, and the officers of the paper were retried in May 1982. Once again they received an acquittal, and the charges were finally laid to rest. At that time, the materials confiscated by the police in the 1977 raid were finally returned to the paper.

The ordeal cost The Body Politic 100,000 Canadian dollars in legal fees and six years of aggravation. Though the collective attempted to regroup and start over, the paper never fully recovered from its financial problems. In February 1987, after celebrating its fifteenth anniversary, The Body Politic closed shop, citing its outstanding debts as the reason. Ironically, just two months earlier, the Ontario legislature finally passed a provincial gay rights ordinance, banning discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

Clubheads unite-your album is here! In association with the legendary Canadian dance label Hi-Bias, Popular Records presents a special double-CD (also on cassette) aimed squarely at the club music lover in all of us.

A banging collection of big club remixes on two CD's. One has been DJ mixed for non-stop dancing. The second one is made up of separate cuts. Every single on this album was or will soon be released on vinyl specifically for DJs. Over half of them are Popular singles.

Massive Club hits such as Alexia - "Number One," Gusto - "Disco Revenge," Pomo Kings - "Up To No Good" and D&G - "Music" are Popular releases on this compilation. Hi-Bias includes Temperance - "Forever Young" and "Lost In Love," Shauna Davis - "Get Away," Oval Emotion - "Higher & Higher," even Elastic Band with their brilliant cover of Kate Bush's "Running Up That Hill."

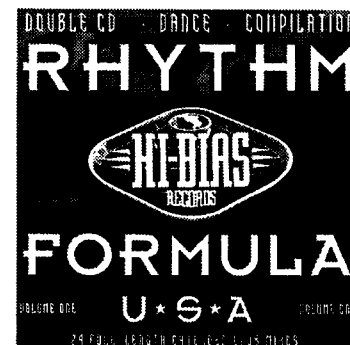

Hi-Bias has launched many artists careers both in Canada and abroad. Rhythm Formula "USA" is an integral part of their next phase of their musical journey.

While DJ's who have had trouble getting some of these singles will love this set, anyone who loves to dance and is looking for a great collection of hits that span mainstream dance to house hits will find this set a goldmine. The first CD with it's DJ mixed non-stop action is an added plus that's great for home parties over this holiday season.

Popular records has also released a second CD -single by Italian designers Domenico Dolce & Stephano Gabbana. "More More More" is the latest from this dynamic duo. You may remember their recent hit single and music video "Music" which made it to #13 on Billboards dance chart.

"More More More" is produced by the same team that made "Music" a hit. If you loved that retro disco sound updated nicely, you will also love this new one.

I remember playing the original club hit done by Andrea True Connection (a famous porn star) and wondered if I would enjoy this remake as much as I still love the original. A quick run through of all the mixes gave me at least two new versions to love.

The remixes are done by the best in the biz. New York City's superstar DJ Junior Vasquez and Milan's Alex Natale both whom contributed mixes to the "Music" CD. The 12" DJ vinyl single came out early December and was released on RED VINYL. (Of course I didn't get one of those! hint hint)

Vocals for the song were sung by American singer Dana Dawson who has had notable import success with her EMI/UK single "3 Is Family." As with "Music" the Italian designers actually appear on the record, dropping in catchy spoken loops "D&G is more."

Through the release of "More More More" Dolce & Gabbana are able to continue to explore other worlds surrounding fashion and to tap into the energy and excitement of nightclub culture which they love so much.

For this VJ reviewer I can't wait for the Video release! For those of you who run out and buy the CD-single, you'll get an extra treat! Each stickered commercial CD package has an entry form you can mail in to enter a drawing to win a $1000 D&G Shopping Spree at the new D&G boutique located on West Broadway in New York's hot SoHo neighborhood!

Interview with Todd Pouwels by Sherry Sink

Imagine if you will a cozy coffeehouse, not unlike the one inhabited by the cast of you-know-what Thursday night show, with music jamming in the background and the aroma of hot fragrant mocha latte wafting through the air. Todd and I sink into the soft squishy cushions of the couch and begin our talk, a philosophical discussion of life, the future, and rockin' music.

Okay, okay...so we really met over the phone. I put him on hold too many times and he hung up on me. But then I called back, apologized profusely, and thus, our new friendship was born. I'm really glad too because we had such a great time talking and I got to know him pretty well.

For example, so far I've learned Todd is an up-and-coming new musician who started singing at a very young age, studied and earned his music degree at St. Norbert College in DePere, Wisconsin, dabbled in backup singing (including a one-concert gig with Poison one summer), and then moved to his current home in Chicago, Illinois. Since then, Todd has played the lead character in the musicals Working and The Fantastiks, sung for political and sporting events, and lately, has been recording his latest music in Minneapolis and Chicago studios. He seems to be a talented singer whose positive attitude and great determination are sure to get him far. Here is just a little bit of the conversation we shared.

Sherry Sink: Let's start off with something easy, Todd. You once studied opera at St. Norbert College, yet your newest recording is complete pop ballads and dance music. What made you switch your focus?

Todd: I find it easier to express myself as an artist through the pop and dance medium. Although I appreciate all styles of music, I found opera to be too confining and regimented for me.

SS: Cool. What has given you a stronger motivation to pursue this music?

Todd: My first demo, at age 19, was a tape of standards and contemporary jazz. It was noticed by CBS, and thus landed me a job in Chicago.

SS: What is the most creative part of the job for you?

Todd: When the band actually gets together and we rehearse, it can be really creative. I learned over time that, at least with live recording, you don't have to have everything mapped out perfectly right then and there, you kind of improv a little bit and feel the music at the moment and let everyone contribute their own thing to the project. And you don't know exactly what it's going to sound like until it's done, but that's kind of the beauty of it, 'cause you sort of make it happen together. As individuals we add our own perspective to it, and I think that's the most creative aspect.

SS: What's the least creative part of the job?

Todd: When you're working on a song and you just come to this block in the road -- you look at this thing you've written and have no idea why you wrote it or if it's going to work. You put it on the shelf, then take it off the shelf, put it back on the shelf, take it off. You look at it again. Nothing happens. You feel totally dry, like you have a cement brain with no creative juices flowing whatsoever in your body and you wonder why you're even a writer.

SS: Sounds inspiring.

Todd: (laughs) Well, ultimately, HOPEFULLY, it pays off in the not-so-distant future. Everyone goes through dry spells, but then all of a sudden you're sitting in a taxi and you wish you had a tape recorder with you because you have all these ideas floating through your head and you have no idea why the sudden splurge of creativity starts leaking from your brain. Then you rush home to the piano, wishing you had eight hands, two to play the piano, two to write out the music, two to record the "session," and two to do...whatever, I guess.

SS: Do your parents understand your passion for show-biz?

Todd: They know there's this driving force somewhere within me that I can almost not control. I can't calm this wild beast passion thing inside me (laughs). Sometimes I wish I could and sometimes I think my parents wish I could too.

SS: How have they reacted to your music?

Todd: They like my music for the most part. They've had to adjust to certain styles of music I've done. For example, they loved listening to my theater songs earlier in my career but had to re-vamp their ears for my current album, which has a dance focus to it.

SS: How would you describe your style?

Todd: Well, my dance music is Erasure-ish/Depeche Mode-ish/current U2-ish. Some of my softer ballads might be described as Elton John meets Annie Lennox in the back of Mariah Carey's van (laughs). It took me a while to find my style. I was first in music theater, then doing standards at various jazz clubs in Chicago, performing live and trying to find my niche. Then I started writing my own music, writing for my own voice, not trying to be a Harry Connick Jr. or an Elton John, or any other personification. Through writing my own stuff, only then did I mold myself into the artist I am now, the artist currently known as TODD (laughs again).

SS: Would you ever change your name?

Todd: No. I don't want to be the artist formerly known as anything. I just want to be Todd, because that's the name I was born with. I'm not a Prince or a superhero.

Public Notice! RAINBOW OVER WISCONSIN ANNUAL MEETING Monday, January 19, 7 pm At Sass, Green Bay

Open to the public. We will elect the officers for 1998 at this meeting.

Below: Ken Rohde, a member of Rainbow Over Wisconsin held his annual birthday weekend fundraiser for ROW. Thursday, Dec. 11 at Brandy's II, Friday at Napalese & Saturday at Za's. $720 was raised at Za's which featured Nine Inch Males (Below) An additional $184 was raised between Naps & Brandys II. Local entertainers provided a show at Naps.

The word is official - Saturday, Jan., 31, Leather Swap Meet will be at Woody's, 2nd and Lapham (Polish Moon area), Milwaukee. Set up time for vendors will be 6 PM with sales to start at 7 PM. Vendors will be there all evening or until they run out of stock.

This event is hosted by the Great Lakes Harley Riders and the Wisconsin Boot Men. Both of these groups are not "formally" clubs, just men who share common interests and know how to keep in touch.

Later that evening a 10 P.M. beer bust co-hosted by the Argonauts of Wis. and The Castaways M.C. Didn't get word if this is just a social or a fund raiser.

This was just firmed up so you can expect one or more of the other area clubs to host something in conjunction with same. I tend to suspect an after-hours and some sort of Breakfast/brunch gathering will also happen. I'll keep you posted.

Last year's swap meet was the first time. It was a lot of fun and very successful, with men from Chicago, Minneapolis as well as all of Wisconsin coming to town for the weekend. Expect the same this year.

Many persons couldn't find space so they sold out of their bags, on the ends of the pool table and even bar stools.

Most everything was under-priced and went in a hurry. One guy brought in something he outgrew, sold it and with $5 more, ended up with a pair of expensive boots he had always admired.

BTW - for you guys who know Nature (formerly of L.V., now Salt Lake City). He is wheelchair bound. He had to sell his bike and is selling off his boot collection. Bob G., of Wholesale Boots is assisting by listing the boots on his web site. The site address is www.tbci.com/wbs/. If you are interested, let him know.

You can also contact Nature at Boots2707@aol.com. I am sure he would enjoy hearing from you.

Any of you have a picture of him in all his leather, big boots, on his Bike with the large flags mounted and the pink feather boa flowing in the wash? This was a sight to see and if I could borrow it, I would like to publish it. This man was fun to be around.

You folks in South Central Wisconsin seem to have been holding out the rest of us. (well at least me).

Cardinal Bar, 418 E. Wilson, Madison, (608) 251-0080, Fetish Night each first Tuesday of the month. (Very eclectic crowd, straight, bi, gay, pansexual, diversity of faces and ages. Gets crowded from 10 pm to mi night. Nice atmosphere to relax, whatever scene one's into).

Inferno, 1718 Commercial Ave. (no phone listed in book). They have occasional L/L, B/D demonstrations. They advertised "Industrial Bondage w/Scary Mike & the Torture Garden at 9 pm, Dec. 12."

Thanks, Gus and Roy.

Here's another thing that pissed me off about the damn computer. The ONYX sent me a mime (what ever the heck that is) and when I opened it, it came out jumbled up. I did pick up the fact that the Club, made up of men of color, is hosting a party at Mid Atlantic Leather (MAL), Sat., Jan 17, 2 to 6 PM.

MAL is like a run, complete with a contest, somewhere between IML and Northwoods, held in Washington, DC. The Saturday night buffet tables are spectacular, as in unbelievable, -- but the lines to get to the tables are even more spectacular -- and to get some of the whole meal, i.e., salad, appetizers, entrees will put you in 3 different and very long lines. Life is too short for that, but I am going again this year. Dinner at a downtown restaurant in DC can be great.

Anyway, Back to the Onyx message. Try to make sense out of This " - - PRESENTS AFTERNOON AFTER HOURS COCKTAIL PARTY - - " an afternoon after hours cocktail party??? -- admission is free, so I will be there. They also will be introducing the Onyx Pearls: Women of Color, then. FMI E mail ONYXmail@aol.com or the ONYXline @ 312.329.6141

A final thought - Before you criticize a man, walk a mile in his shoes. That way, if he gets pissed off, he's a mile away and barefoot. Author unknown. Love, Papa

SS: (laughs) While we're on the subject, if you could be a superhero, who would you be?

Todd: Hmmm, I guess the one that can read people's minds, so I could know what they were really thinking. It seems as though so many people say one thing, but then they do another. I guess it makes for interesting songwriting, but I still want to know what people are thinking, dammit!

SS: Who has given you the best career advice?

Todd: I follow my own intuition. As far as getting the best career support I'd have to give the gold medal to my family. They've always believed in me and encouraged me to follow my dreams.

SS: What was the first thing you auditioned for?

Todd: I was about seven years old and auditioned for a commercial at WBAY-TV in Green Bay. I wore an oversized mint green suit, was very shy, and barely read my lines louder than a half-assed whisper. I didn't get the part -- surprise, surprise.

SS: Cute. I assume you gained some confidence from grade school age to high school. What was your first musical audition?

Todd: The Wiz, when I was in high school. I almost got the part of the Scarecrow but the director didn't think I was flexible or agile enough for the role, so I was offered to be a Pitt Singer.

SS: That's the pits.

Todd: Actually, I had a lot of fun. I sang in almost every musical number, and I was the voice of the cyclone-- ooohhh (laughs).

SS: You took acting in college. What has that experience done for you?

Todd: Acting really opened me up. It helped in finding myself and getting in touch with "me," getting in touch with who I really was. It helped me get in touch with my inner writer and what I wanted to do with writing music, what really influenced me, and not just being a puppet on an operatic stage, but to be a more creative musician, able to do my own thing, express my music in my own way.

SS: Why do you think this style of music allows you to be more creative than if you had stayed with opera and more classical styles of music?

Todd: As mentioned earlier, I feel most natural and comfortable in relating this style of music to people. Don't get me wrong -- I love classical styles of music, but it's not the best avenue for me to express myself.

SS: What did you do before you started pursuing music?

Todd: I've always felt like I've been pursuing music all my life. It's in-born in me, God-given or something like that.

SS: God-given? That's intriguing. Do you consider yourself a spiritual person?

Todd: I am very spiritual. I was raised in a Christian household which, I think, gave me good morals and values. I branched out theologically to study other religions, such as Buddhism, Judaism, the Qaballah, and anything that helped center me as a human being. My spirituality has really helped me make it through some of the rough times, like when I was unemployed and my self-esteem was low.

SS: That's terrific. Let's discuss a more pleasant time in your life. What has been your favorite experience so far in all of your performing?

Todd: I love all of it -- from the music theater to the jazz clubs to the live recording sessions. I love performing, but especially when it's my own material -- it's more intimate, you know.

SS: What has been the strangest experience you've had in your music?

Todd: Oh, God -- a lot! The strangest gig I did was dressing up as a Diva Queen in drag, going to Chicago O'Hare Airport, and singing torch songs to some man for his birthday, while he waited for his luggage at the carousel along with five hundred other people. I told him how much I loved him and that I was having his baby.

SS: (laughs) That's pretty strange. What did the security at the airport do?

Todd: They knew I was coming and did nothing. I followed the guy all the way to his car and he offered me $200 to leave him alone. I took the money and then gave him a big fat kiss. And the whole thing was videotaped! I made a lot of money that day.

SS: I should think they should pay you a lot to go that far. Were you this adventurous as a kid?

Todd: I was very shy and reserved in grade school. My family moved from city to city, district to district, so I had to adjust to different school settings, fitting into whatever mold I needed to survive.

SS: Sounds rough for a young kid. Did being involved in music help you "survive" childhood too?

Todd: Definitely. Music became my playmate, so to speak, and became very therapeutic for me.

SS: What are your career goals now?

Todd: My career goals are to finish fine-tuning my album, manufacturing my CD, and finding an agency or manager to represent me as a solo artist.

SS: Explain to me the importance of a manager or agent.

Todd: It's important to have a manager or agent represent you in the music business. A person cannot send unsolicited materials to a record label without having it handled through a manager, agent or an entertainment attorney. It's very important. And finding the right person or persons to work with can be difficult and takes time.

SS: If a manager were reading this interview and wanted to reach you, how could they contact you?

Todd: They could contact me at Hot Toddy Productions, 830 W. 75th Street, Suite #173, Willowbrook, Illinois, 60521 or leave a message at (920) 434-1561. I would be glad to send a demo tape to anyone in the industry.

SS: So now we know you're working hard on your recordings and on finding a manager. What are Thanksgiving Saturday, Lee and I ventured to Green Bay. We took in Brandys II for a couple of beers, from there went a few blocks further East to Buddy's or is that Buddies', where I ran into Tom and Jeff, longtime friends, now in Iowa just east of Omaha. Caught up on the news with Jeff and John while Thom T was picking Tom W brains about computers. Those four guys know all there is to know about these damn machines and I am green with envy.

Anyway, like it said, I dumped the thing and the column didn't get out. I didn't have time to redo before taking off for London. The end result was I lost a bunch of information and didn't mention the Atons and the Oberons who were holding fundraisers for their very worthy causes. My apologies, I hope they were successful.

Please note, if you had copied Quest in the mail you sent to me, (like the Unicorns did) Quest could have printed it. See, except for my charm and beauty, you don't need me at all.

Also lost with the info about Buddy's, a really nice lounge/bar in Green Bay, which open a few weeks before and located a few blocks east of Brandy's II on Main St. I write this without the dates, address or even the names of the owners. It used to be a biker bar when I was hanging out in GB. They have cleaned and brightened it up. The name on the awning had not been changed. When we were there, it had Knights something or other on it.

Tell you what you can do for me. Go to Buddy's, have a drink or two and ask them for the information and send it to me. Don't mention my name, I don't wana seem more stupid than necessary.

BTW Thom, would you please send Tom W. E mail address? Tnks

About London, the weather, I kid you not, was near perfect -- like spring. Only one AM with showers and the daytime temps in the 50's. Getting there on NorthWorst out of O'hare was a bitch -- our bags arrived on United before we did on American, go figure.

The other Queen was having tea with someone more important than me, so I didn't get to see the newly rebuilt Windsor Castle. -- The Abby had something happening til 4 PM and my feet were killing me, so back to the Colherne Tavern and cooled our heels with a pint or two of lager. Met some very nice men.

Overall, a great city to visit and sight see. The people are quite open and friendly. Only three complaints, food lacks taste, lousy/overpriced drinks and too damn expensive. Is there anything left?

The Argonauts of Wisconsin celebrate twenty-four years as a club Saturday, January 17, in Green Bay. They will be offering party options allowing you to take in just cocktails and dinner or everything including an after hours party. (or the other way around) The AOW is known for their good food and fun times, all at very reasonable prices.

Some housing by members is available on a first come first serve basis. Other housing options are available. Indicate your needs for hotel/motel accommodations and they will put you in touch.

Reservations are necessary and expected by Jan.7. FMI and applications, call 920-437-4232, Voice:

920-437-4273 or E-Mail: Argonauts1@aol.com

While on the subject of the Argonauts, I recieved a lengthy message relating to Argonauts Charities, which recently incorporated and now is applying for grants to assist PW As in the NE Wisconsin area. The AOW has been doing this for quite a number of years, and with incorporation, will expand their scope. Due to the length of the message, I will edit and submit separately, so when room allows, Mark and/or Ted can insert it.

I am very proud to say I have been supporting this cause from the beginning and will continue whenever I can. Be sure you know, I am a cynic when it comes to being asked for money for charities and other do-gooder things. I encourage you to be the same.

your more personal goals?

Todd: It's important for me to spend time with my family when I can, especially the nieces and nephews. I also like to keep myself physically fit, so my goal is to work out at least three times a week.

SS: Are you dating?

Todd: I was afraid you were going to ask that question. No, I'm not dating anyone. I've decided to focus on my career and let the romance thing unfold on its own in the future.

SS: Ah, a romantic at heart. Do you think it's easier to date someone in the music industry, someone who understands the demands of the job?

Todd: I don't think it would matter what the person's job title would be. I think I'll know when the right person comes along -- a chemistry thing, you know.

SS: What aspect of your career has been least realized so far?

Todd: Tough question. I think I'm a fairly young musician still evolving. I consider myself a "work in progress." Once I find representation I think more doors will open for me. I have great faith in people.

SS: You seem very confident in this interview. Have you ever met anyone who has thrown you?

Todd: Not yet.

SS: We'll see. I bet meeting some of your favorite artists would make you pause for a second. What kind of music do you like to listen to?

Todd: Lots. I could go from Elton John to Alanis Morissette to Maria Callas to Garth Brooks to Barbra Streisand to Poison. I'm very eclectic with my music.

SS: Your lyrics are innovative. What inspires you to write songs?

Todd: I've been inspired by people, circumstances, and situations in my life. My songs reflect what is important to me, whether it's autobiographical or simply empathy regarding a situation, not unlike other songwriters.

SS: What was the inspiration for the song "Desolate Helter Skelter"?

Todd: These lyrics could almost be taken directly from my journal entries last February. The song was inspired by a relationship gone bad, suffocation within self-built prison walls. The lyrics wrote themselves, with a lot of anger.

SS: The phrase "helter skelter" was used by killer Charles Manson, stolen from a Beatles song. Are you afraid using that in your song could stir disciples of Manson?

Todd: Not necessarily. My song's character was a person literally living in a world of utter chaos, a self-made hell. This person is perhaps a disciple of their innermost fears. This line sums it up: "You're seeking safety, seeking a kind of shelter. Living in a world, a desolate helter skelter."

SS: What was the inspiration for the song

"Sometimes I Wonder"?

Todd: That was another broken relationship, which is probably why I'm not dating right now (laughs).

SS: Why did you also record this particular song in Spanish and French?

Todd: I think people all over the world could relate to the lyrics of the song, the message. And I wanted to reach people in different cultures.

SS: Do you ever worry that some people might not "get" your music?

Todd: No, if somebody doesn't "get" it, they can ask somebody who does (laughs). I have to write the way I feel and write what is inherently in me to do so, and if somebody doesn't understand that, then I guess that's okay. But maybe my music can open a door for someone, give them a different perspective.

SS: You seem to speak very intelligently. Does this somehow reflect in your music?

Todd: I don't know how I'd rank on the IQ test, but I try to write innovative songs, including the lyric and the chart. I am currently writing a song dealing with certain political issues and another about environmental concerns.

SS: Where are you sending your demo CD once it's finished?

Todd: I plan to send it to anyone who wants to hear it, and I have a special list of entertainment attorneys, managers, and agents who will definitely get a copy.

SS: What advice would you give to young aspiring artists?

Todd: I think it's important that you find a reason to stay driven. Find what motivates you, or why you have this need to do whatever it is you're doing. I have to do this because I feel like it's my life. I'm not happy if I don't do this. I feel I was born to do this. If you have a dream don't give up on it because it will happen. But it's up to you to make it happen, and nothing is impossible. Be genuine, hard-working, true to yourself, and then doors will open to you. It will happen, but you have to believe in yourself, even when the chips are down. You need to always have that focus, have that belief, have that drive. Make it happen!

As you have now read, Todd and I talked quite a bit. He had many more insights to share, much more than will fit in this interview. When we did finally hang up our phones, I was sorry to say good-bye. But you know what? I believe we'll all hear more of those insights, through his music. With such a focus on what he wants, I know he'll "make it happen." You heard it here first, people. Spread the word.*
